The bidding:
East South West North
Pass 1NT Pass 3NT

It is assumed West has the king. The next step is the critical one. Two tricks must be developed if game is to be made. Possibly the natural inclination is to go to work on the longest and king of hearts is to play the queen from dummy on the opening lead. When East plays low, strongest suit—clubs.

But this, it can be seen, is a dangerous method of play. Suppose a club is led to the ace and another returned to the jack. If the finesse loses, and even though the suit breaks 3-2, only an eighth trick has been established. A heart return is apt to put South out of business, since no ninth trick is in sight.

Attacking the club suit first is therefore unsound procedure. It is better to develop the diamonds because this effort is a forward step which at the same time prevents a heart return from West.

Accordingly, at trick two, a low diamond is led from dummy and the ten is finessed. West wins, but cannot afford a heart return, and presumably shifts to a spade.

This is taken in dummy and another low diamond is led, the nine winning. We are now up to eight tricks. The ace is cashed, but the king does not drop.

Now the ace of clubs is cashed and followed by a club finesse. It loses, but the fourth club provides the ninth trick.

The correct order of play makes the contract.

Opening lead—six of hearts. Here is a fairly common type of hand in the sense that declarer has to make an early decision on which line of play to adopt. Since the situation faced is the kind that repeats itself from time to time, it may serve a useful purpose to consider South's problem and the approach to it.

A heart is led and declarer counts seven sure tricks—two spades, two hearts, a diamond, and two clubs. Additional tricks depend upon the location of the king of hearts and the missing diamond and club honors.

Complaint By Parent Probed

TORONTO (CP)—Police and education officials Friday investigated a parent's complaint that officers invaded a public school, interrogated six students and removed one of them to a police station. The student was reported threatened during three hours of questioning.

The boy's parents said he was threatened Thursday concerning a malicious damage case on a suburban North York farm. He was not charged.

Police denied the boy was threatened. They said he had a bicycle chain and quoted him as saying he carried it for protection against other boys.

Robert Land, executive assistant to the director of education of the North York board of education, said today it was the board's policy to let police enter its schools and question pupils.
