1,000 Attend Closing Night Of Carnival

Almost 1,000 people packed the Montague Curling Rink Saturday night to attend the last showing of the Legion carnival which held a four-night run last week. The milling crowd of young and old generously patronized the many amusement booths, and had a splendid evening's enjoyment. Mr. Donald MacLeod of Glen William very capably entertained the large crowd with bagpipe selections throughout the evening. At the conclusion of the program, the door prize, a gallon of Prestone, donated by Brookview Service Station; and an electric iron, donated by Stewart and Beck, was won by Mr. Bruce Myers, Roseneath. The large bag of flour, donated by Poole and Thompson, Ltd. was won by Mr. Russell MacGregor, Montague. The carnival, as on the past three occasions, was a huge success, and is indicative of the generosity of the people of the community in supporting worthwhile community activities.

He was fined $5.00 and costs or 10 days in jail. In the second case a resident of Union Road pleaded guilty to unlawfully possessing liquor in a motor truck and was fined $20.00 and costs or 30 days in jail. In the final case a resident of Hopefield pleaded guilty to being intoxicated in a public place. He was fined $20.00 and costs or in default to serve 30 days. Court adjourned for one week.

It was a beautiful October day with the temperature from the start until late afternoon in the 50's. The Princess, who on Friday wore a brown ensemble, appeared Saturday in a slate blue coat of pure silk with a matching dress and black cock-ferret hat the same outfit she wore in Ottawa Wednesday. The Duke, who for much of the tour so far has appeared in his naval lieutenant-commander's uniform, wore a dark blue suit throughout. As usual he was hatless. Both were in evening dress for the official dinner in the evening. There was many a poignant moment during a day so strenuous that the Princess rested for a few minutes before an appearance at a luncheon for women by Mrs. Ray Lawson, wife of the Lieutenant-Governor. Some of these came during ceremonies in Toronto's exhibition grounds where thousands upon thousands of children cut loose in their welcome and at east-end Riverdale Park, where other thousands of kids were gathered. The Princess before her departure from England expressed a wish that children particularly should be given an opportunity to see her and the Duke on their travels, and Saturday was the kid's day. But even here adult officialdom crept in, as it has too often during the tour. It was noted, for instance, that 1,200 of the best grandstand seats at the exhibition where the crowds in the area were estimated at 100,000 were occupied by local dignitaries. Saturday's program started with an appearance at the exhibition and drive through west-end streets. Then shortly after noon, they drove to Hart House at the University of Toronto where the Princess spoke briefly to assembled professors and university officials. Through the windows could be heard the band outside playing "Will Ye Nae Come Back Again," and it was then that their Royal Highnesses walked for the first time on their visit through crowds. It was only a 200-yard walk, from Hart House to the Legislature, along narrow laneways. To the thousands upon either side, the Prince and Princess gestured and smiled easily. They apparently enjoyed the spirit of informality. Duke Speaks Then after a brief reception in the Lieutenant-Governor's suite the couple went separate ways for the first time in six days. The Princess attended a luncheon for women and the Duke spoke to a Board of Trade luncheon for 1,500 in the Royal York Hotel. There, he lauded Canada's accomplishments in the field of science. Spectators lining broad University Avenue saw the handsome 30-year-old Duke sped to his luncheon appointment by mostly women. Riding in an open car, he waved to them repeatedly. In the afternoon, the royal pair overstay their scheduled time at a scoreless charity hockey game in Maple Leaf Gardens. They were to have watched Toronto Maple Leafs and Chicago Black Hawks for 15 minutes. They had a half hour. Then they left for Riverdale Park in the east end and a "date" with the thousands of children waiting there, hurried north to Sunnybrook Veterans Hospital just across Toronto's border in North York, and came back downtown to the Hospital for Sick Children on University Avenue. The afternoon's last engagement, late in the day as dusk fell swiftly over a city was tea with the 48th Highlanders in the University Avenue Armouries. The Princess is colonel-in-chief of the regiment. The days outstanding incident was when the Princess and the Duke, perhaps for the first time in their lives in public, rode on the back of their open motor-car as it crept about the exhibition grounds. They passed twice before a grandstand crammed with children—behind the 1,200 adults—and around the half-mile track. No movie star or olympic champion returning to her home town could have enjoyed it more, or had a more vociferous reception. An estimated 100,000 children in three separate places viewed the royal visitors. They were packed into the exhibition grounds, into Riverdale Park and into Maple Leaf Gardens. So great was the crush around Riverdale Park that a hurried call was sent out for an additional 100 soldiers to help control the crowds. The evening rest in the royal train was all too brief after a strenuous day before the Prince and Princess had to leave for the Ontario dinner. During the night their train slipped quietly out of the city.
