Ellen's Diary

Continued from page 2 though we never got much cooperation from the parents in our 'being-wooded' days, did we?" "Which leaves us," one remarked with a merry laugh, "with no one to blame but ourselves for taking the Lord's sendings!" And a pause must come in the work then, to allow time for such hearty chuckles they brought mother-to-us to the doorway to inquire about the joke and several supplied the assurance that "it's no joke but the plain unvarnished truth!"

"And then the marrying," the first one continued her reminiscing, "and for us still left at home, preparations for your homing on special days. Oh, yes, we always had a fine time together!" "And did you ever" one sister questioned wiping down a wall, "know the complete comfort of reading on an upturned chamber pillow?" "Why, did you do that too?" another chimed in. "Certainly" — in that small sunny alcove on the verandah — the secret nook where by day the pillow was left to its airing, after the upstairs work was done! Well, that was the best haven on the farm; Many a story I 'devoured' there, and the tears I lost over the characters. . . . "That's why you like to cry now at the pictures!" one commented. "They could call and call, but they'd never think of looking there for me. You too must have stowed away there, Ellen?" . . . But we raised eyes to a familiar apple tree in the orchard bare yet and gaunt, to wonder about the robin, the only creature aware of our refuge as we too had pursued our reading in peace. . . . "If I wanted you to give me something," queried granddaughter recently "and you wouldn't, and I sat down and cried and cried, would you give it to me then?" "No indeed, not if you cried and cried!" we replied. "Well," she commented, "it wouldn't be a very peaceful place for you, would it?" Exceedingly peaceful was our haven, once upon a time in the leafy heights of that old apple tree. . . . Cleaning and decorating completed — and now home to Alderlea if and when a familiar truck comes in sight. And for what especially would we give thanks this night that closes the week? And it comes to mind that one of our blessings is to have been born to a family, some now in their westerling years, whose first duty and privileges has been and is to "Honor" their father and mother. Until Monday — Diary — Good-night!
