

Lining Up Fights For A Champion Is Not Simple

By WHITNEY MARTIN
NEW YORK (AP) — We don't know too much about Emil Lence, the little man who wasn't there when Cus D'Amato made the announcement he was ready to farm out his heavyweight champion, Floyd Patterson, to various independent promoters.

Lence has been named No. 1 man in D'Amato's resistance movement against the International Boxing Club. That is, he has been elected by D'Amato to promote the first Patterson title defense.

Then in the No. 2 spot, is Jack Hurley, given the Pacific northwest territory. It is our idea that if the master plan ever gets past the No. 1 stage, meaning that Lence promotes a title fight and the project is successful, Hurley will really go to town.

Never was there a man who could sit in a hotel room surrounded by stacks of newspapers, and with scissors and paste pot and get more publicity.

Hurley, a dedicated foe of the IBC, would jump at the chance to promote a heavyweight championship fight.

In making his announcement that various promoters would be given an opportunity to headline Patterson on their shows D'Amato is doing a lot of assuming.

In the first place, he is assuming his champion will knock over opponents as fast as they are set up for him. In the second place, he is assuming all promoters are qualified to stage a big show.

It ain't that easy.

It ain't that easy. It is a tremendous job calling for a lot of know-how, from how to handle tickets to getting the maximum publicity out of the training camps.

You just don't sign a couple of fighters, announce the date, they will meet, and take it for granted the public, and the fighters, will show up.

D'Amato's do-it-yourself project may never reach promoter No. 2, but if it does, it will be interesting to watch Hurley operate.

Vancouver Rowing Coach Has Knack Of Being Winner

By JIM PEACOCK
EDMONTON (CP)—A famous Vancouver rowing coach has revealed that he was approached by Cambridge University to train its crews for the Royal Henley regatta this summer.

Frank Read, who coached Canadian crews to gold and silver medals in the fours and eights respectively at the last Olympic games, says he had to turn down the invitation because of business pressure.

"I hated to turn down such an invitation," Read said in an interview while attending a sportsmen's dinner here. "Imagine England, the seat of rowing, going to the colonies to learn how it's done!"

Actually, to followers of rowing, the Cambridge invitation is not as surprising as it might seem. Read's record as coach of rowing at University of British Columbia has been nothing less than spectacular.

After starting at UBC in 1952 with eight students and a budget of $300, he put together an eight-oar crew that in 1954 won the British Empire Games title by defeating England and in 1955 defeated Russia at the Henley Regatta before losing in a close final to the United States.

Last year at Melbourne, his fours won the gold medal and his eights took the silver in a spintangling race with Australia and the United States. The former is especially significant in the fact that the Canadian entry was a novice four, having started rowing only a few months before. A novice crew had never before competed in the Olympic event.

Frank Read's interest, however, is not primarily in winning. It is in building healthy minds and bodies through properly supervised athletics.

"Every youngster in Canada should be given a chance to compete in some sport," he told the sportsmen's dinner, "but it should always be under strict guidance."

Read said the development of the body "must go hand in hand with development of the mind." Athletics, under proper supervision, "can be used very successfully to develop strength of body, mind and character in our youth."

KEEPING UP TO DATE

Goalie Glen Hall of Detroit Red Wings, voted the National Hockey League's all-star netminder in the season just ended, says he's keeping up with his future by reading the newspapers.

With reports rampant that Hall and Ted Lindsay were being shuffled off to Chicago Black Hawks, then to Boston Bruins by Red ing manager Jack Adams, who has been critical of both players in recent months, Hall was asked what he had heard from Adams about his whereabouts for next fall.

"I haven't heard from Adams since I left Detroit," quipped the young goaltender from Humboldt, Sask. "All I know is what I read in the papers." He paused for effect, then added: "And you gotta read steady, too."

CHURCH INTRODUCTION

Maurice (the Rocket) Richard of Montreal Canadiens came to Edmonton for the sportsmen's dinner and soon learned his fame has spread far and wide.

Arriving on a Sunday morning, the Rocket attended mass. The service was interrupted briefly while the priest introduced the famous hockey player.

"This was the first time anything like this has happened to me," Richard said, a little bewildered.

Remember When

Cleveland Indians Sell Art Houtteman

Sammy Mandell successfully defended his world lightweight boxing title against Vancouver's Jim McLarnin 29 years ago tonight at New York. It was five years later McLarnin first won the welterweight title from Young Corbett, a crown that McLarnin lost, regained and lost again in his epic fights against Barney Ross.

CLEVELAND (AP)—Cleveland Indians Monday sold pitcher Art Houtteman to Baltimore Orioles for an undisclosed amount and signed first baseman Eddie Ribbons, who was released by Detroit Tigers a week ago.

Robinson, 36, will be used as a pinch hitter. He first came to the major leagues as an Indian in 1947 and was first baseman on the Cleveland world championship team of 1948. He hit .204 in 101 games with New York Yankees and Kansas City Athletics last season, including seven home runs.

Demand Is For Classical Music

LONDON (CP) — Wagner and Bach, Brahms and Offenbach, may become members of a new-style hit parade in Walworth Road central library. A new musical venture—gramophone recitals—is being tried by the council in London's Southwark district.

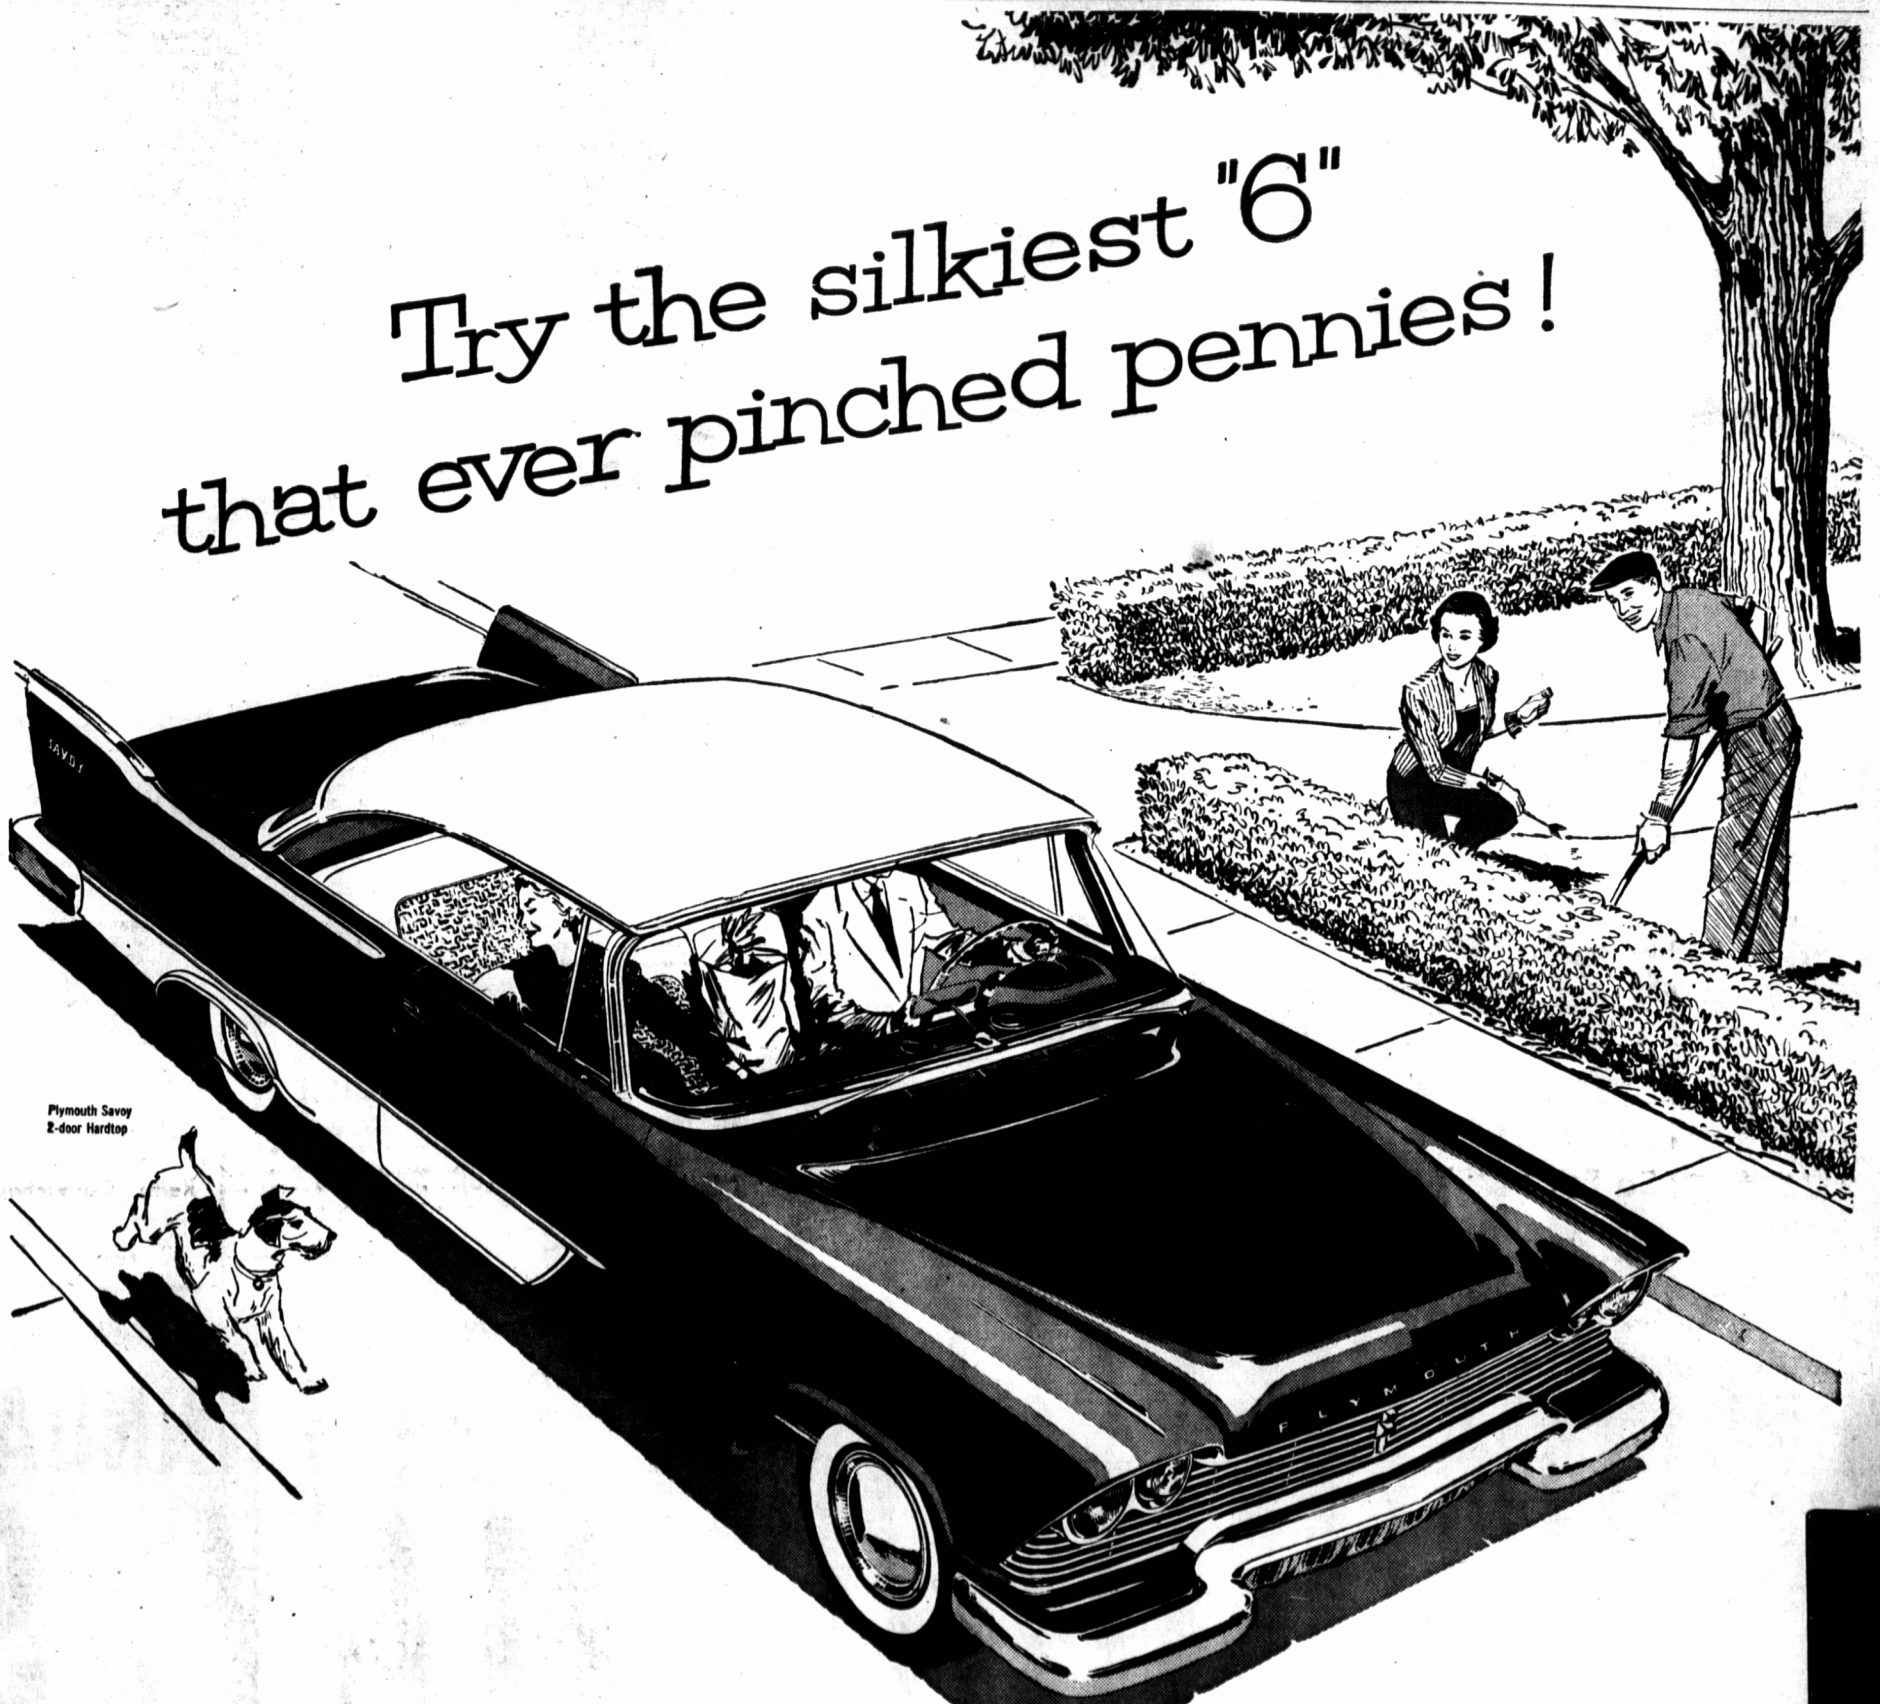

Borough librarian Frank Boone says: "Ever since our gramophone library opened, we have been amazed by the high proportion of requests for classical music."
