know — and probably expect — just what happens. Of course he's going to brag about his easy conquest of you, and I don't think you need to be told what the other boys will think of you. You state coyly that you "worry over small things like this." Well, girls usually don't regard their reputations as "small things." You may be sure that the evaluation you put on your own character will be accepted by everyone else, so don't waste time wondering if you suddenly discover the nicer young people shunning you. You have put the "welcome" mat out for trouble, and if there's any way at all of piercing through your feigned or real stupidity, I urge you to do some quick changing before it's too late. Pregnancy out of wedlock is no "small thing," and that's what you are headed for if you continue these parking expeditions. You are practically asking Rob to take advantage of you, and he doesn't seem to be the sort of young man to refuse the invitation. I've been blunt with you, Joan, but I hope either my words, or something else, will take the blinders off your moral sense before it's too late.

DEAR MISS DIX: My best friend is the same age as I am—16. She always says she doesn't like the boy I date but she finds every excuse to go to the service station where he works to talk to him. Yet she criticizes every little gift he gives me and what he does.

ANSWER: Read the fable of the Fox and the Grapes and you'll have the answer to your friend's curious behavior. Apparently she likes the boy herself, and is hoping that by continually finding fault with him, she may discourage your fondness for him. Don't let her get away with it.

Where'd they all go? Even without free-handed little girls like this, more families ran out of Kellogg's Corn Flakes this morning than any other cereal. This is happening all the time. That's because Kellogg's Corn Flakes just naturally taste better to more people than any other cereal. Always have. Still do. No wonder so many women pick up a spare package of Kellogg's Corn Flakes every time they buy any other kind of cereal.
