After nearly 10 years of marriage my husband and I separated because of another woman. I was introduced to a man with whom I shared many interests. We got along wonderfully and soon found we were in love.

He made known his intentions of marrying me but insists that we have an affair first, as he "doesn't want to wait" for me. This is much against my moral principles and religious beliefs and I refused.

Now, although he swears he loves me very much, he is breaking off with me unless I consent to the affair. We seem to be at deadlock over the issue. He says he can't understand why I would refuse if I love him; and I feel that if he really loved me he would wait for me. Should I forget about him? Or am I just being "old-fashioned"?

Dear L.G. You are so right. If the man loved you with intent to marry you, and with the honest ardor that makes waiting difficult, he would rejoice in the (as housewife and mother of four), namely that the important thing for any person is a realization of who they are, their identity, and what their role should be in the larger society.

Commitment to something outside oneself brings freedom of mind and spirit, a selflessness in the real sense of the word, which enables one to enjoy the moment, even after changing and dish washing.

Best of all, one no longer needs to hold husband on children captive, in order to "find a life-through them."

Dear P.K.: Latterday egotism emphasis on attaining a sense of personal identity is not a new advance in human consciousness. Rather, it is a revelation of the fact that modern man has become so cut off from the root source of meaningful living as to be halting his head off, so to speak, for answers to such questions as: Who am I? What am I doing here? Etc.

Simply stated, an authentic sense of personal identity (free of competitive ego-driving), is a first fruit of one's awakening to awareness of the relationship potential between the Almighty God and his chosen people. As one faces up to one's prospects and responsibilities in that set up, one experiences a truly "rooted and grounded" sense of being purposeful and directed; also a sense that the spirit is born to be free in all circumstances.

Minchin-Davies Ceremony At St. Peter's Cathedral

The marriage of Rachel Ann Minchin, daughter of William Minchin of New Perth, P.E.I., and the late Mrs. Minchin, of John Peter Handfield Davies, son of the Venerable J. R. and Mrs. J. W. Davies of Charlottetown, took place September 19 at 11 a.m. in St. Peter's Cathedral, Charlottetown.

Archdeacon Davies performed the wedding ceremony and celebrated the Nuptial Eucharist. White Gladioli decorated the altar and bouquets of the same combined with English ivy marked the pews.

The bride, given in marriage by her father and preceded by the Cathedral choir entered the Cathedral during the singing of Praise My Soul the King of Heaven. Her gown was a sheath of peach de - sole with a short corsage of white lace with elbow length sleeves. A panel of pearl de sole with an applique "see border" fell from her shoulders to the hem of the dress. She carried white gladioli bouquets of flowers to match the bouquet.

The bridesmaids were Dorothy Anne of Charlottetown and Catherine Godfrey of Montreal. They wore floor length dresses of old gold brocade with high necklines, three quarter sleeves and bell shaped skirts. They carried gladioli bouquets of white and deep coral and wore matching flowers in their hair.

Douglas Winters of Liverpool, N.S., was best man and the ushers were George Dewar, Ronald Smith and Terry Manning of Charlottetown.

For her son's wedding Mrs. Davies wore a dress of dark green Blin and Blin with a hat of black velvet and dark pink roses. Her accessories were black and her flowers were dark pink roses. Mrs. Percy Worth, aunt of the bride, chose a wool dress and jacket of blue, black hat and black accessories. Her corsage was of pale pink roses.

The reception was held in the Willow Room of the Hotel Charlottetown when Lincoln Dewar proposed the toast to the bride.

For travelling the bride wore a camel's hair suit with dark brown hat, matching bag and brown shoes and gloves. Mr. and Mrs. Davies will reside in Charlottetown.
