ELLEN'S DIARY

Spruce Boughs Covered Our Sleeping Perennials

"Would the kitten eat this?" Peter wondered, holding a plump mouse that had shown an over-fondness for cheese, gingerly by the tail this morning. "Any luck today?" he had inquired before this... in regard to our autumn trappings, peering into the dusk of a closet which admits such stealthy prowlers. The only meagre returns we had received before this had been given to Tabby, who after all has been with us through the various vicissitudes—the ups and downs of a number of years. "Would she? Alex a k a o i n g chap chuckled. Peter lowered the mouse within high reach of the kitten. There was a growl, a surprising flash of white fur and a pleased rustle toward the door. "Well, would she?" Alex smiled.

And November was with us in a gentle wind of morning, in sunshine, in a quiet loneliness, and peace over all. It's charm continues indoors tonight, with the

MARY HAWORTH

Spouse Seeks Books For Widows With Problems

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I enjoy your column and have been particularly interested in your wealth of sources of information to aid persons wanting guidance.

I would appreciate a list of books and publications that would be helpful to the widowed. I am a member of the Post-Cana organization for Catholic widows and widowers as well as the surviving spouse of mixed Catholic marriages.

I edit a small newsletter which is circulated to all on the mailing list. I think a list of books dealing helpfully with the many problems which the widowed must face would be appreciated by all members.

I also I am trying to do my thesis for a master's degree in public relations on "The Communication of the Problems of the Widowed." The list I am asking you to provide would be helpful in preparing my thesis. I have found little "communication" of these problems in any media, other than columns such as your. Thank you. G. C.

DEAR G.C.: If there is a body of literature of "list proportions, that deals specifically with the problems of the widowed, it hasn't come to my attention.

The only book of the sort that I've encountered is Jim and Janet Frank Egleson's "Parents Without Partners: a Guide for Divorced, Widowed or Separated Parents," published in 1961 by E. P. Dutton & Co., Inc., of New York City.

In any case, as you would be starting from scratch to assemble the bibliography you visualize, you should begin by consulting the Readers' Advisory Service of your nearest well-stocked public library. Or, since your address shows you to be a suburban neighbor of the nation's capital, you may consult the rich resources of the Library of Congress, which houses an encyclopedic range of information about who has written what. It is readily accessible in catalogued order.

My own idea is that the "problems of the widowed," to use your phrase, shouldn't be isolated, categorically, from the generality of human trials.

Mr. and Mrs. Irving Drake, were in the city on Friday on business along with Mrs. Clarence MacEwen, and Mrs. Elmer MacEwen.

for the winter months, as her health is not the best.

The rabbit hunting season, has started with a bang last week and by a friend who knocked a few over. They are big, fat and heavy this fall and choice eating for those who like the wild meat.

Thinking of rabbits and the famous French Rabbit Stew, the late John Lapierre, was the king of makers here and his big pot required four rabbits along with a lot of other things including a hunk of pork and a whole day in the making. Many of us remember this tasty dish in years long gone.

There is still considerable soreness here about the removal of the Bristol Post Office to Morell.

Times have changed. Trains and stations have gone forever but it's hard to make country people who are along in the twilight years like walking miles for postal services that was always near their door and where the hours made no difference for 46 years the post office in the Sinnott home opened the door for the public at all and any hour of the day or night this is what is missing now its another world to us all.

Visiting the fish packing plant some years ago we were reminded that the man who invented the machine for the fast removal of the bones and skin from fish was a Bristol man, Doctor J.J. Barry, whose old home is in Bristol, studied the fish processing business in his laboratory in New York City, where he spent many years. In fact Dr. Barry, gave a lifetime to the study of fish starting right here in Bristol, in the packing plants many many years ago. Dr. Barry is still living and as we understand is still active. A brother, Gerald Barry, has spent a lifetime around the seaside in the processing of lobsters and other fish and knows the business from every angle. He has retired from the packing business now.
