

ELLEN'S DIARY

No Worries This Year Over Scarcity Of Feed

"There will be white roofs tomorrow morning," the younger farmer said, calling by a white horse from the barns, to pick up a magazine before going to his house across the line. "The night is cool. It's a start for that follows the stream. We should rise in good time, wouldn't we?" his father suggested.

James smiled, happy to have it so, "farmers will have no worry over any scarcity of feed or bedding for the stock. There is plenty this time to take them through to the spring." Today then, it was, that a machine moved into our stampland to begin the clearing there. "We won't try to get the whole piece done. That would be too much altogether to handle at one time" we overheard one farmer say to the other recently when they surveyed it from the yards.

MARY HAWORTH

Mate's Insane Jealousy Disturbs Wife Deeply

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am deeply in love with my husband, as he is with me. However, there is a problem that stems from his past experience with the wrong sort of women. I knew about this before we were married.

role of tender companionable Dr. Jekyll (as featured in Robert Louis Stevenson's classic). He is being talented Mr. Hyde on an audacious emotional spree when he seems with avidity on the slightest pretext for hounding you with his recurrent jealous fantasies. During these fits he is exercising the feelings he would experience, if he were dealing with a wantonly adulterous wife, of the sort that his sick fancy unconsciously craves from time to time.
