

TO THE EDITOR OF THE COLONIAL HERALD.

I have read with some surprise the communications in the Herald of March 26th, and April 16th, signed "BILL BLUNT," the object of which is to make the impression on the public mind, that the Palladium is the "hired organ" of a Nova Scotia, who are endeavouring to procure the annexation of this Island to the government of that Colony.

It is not only his privilege, but his duty, to demonstrate its dangerous character, and to exhibit the evil consequences of which it would be productive. This would be mainly honest. But to attempt to condemn any opinion, or any man for holding such opinion, without first examining its claims, is arrogant and absurd.

But BILL BLUNT has not furnished any satisfactory evidence of the truth of his charge. From his manner of handling the matter, it appears, after all, very little better than an idle conjecture, backed by some vague reports. He has heard of "two individuals who put their hands into their pockets" to effect this end; and judging "from the channel through which he has it," he sees "no room to doubt its authenticity."

Now this is the whole of the evidence, he remembered, which BILL BLUNT attempts to bring against the Palladium. He has arraigned its Editor before the public, and has become testimony against him; and the above is the proof upon which he relies for his conviction. Now, taking into consideration the character and amount of this evidence, it certainly does seem a most pitiful affair upon which to found a charge so grave. It is a mere report—perhaps the production of some practised manufacturer of news—perhaps the offspring of political spleen or personal dislike, coming, too, privately, and after the lapse of nearly a year since the first projection of the Palladium;—not even then daring boldly to assert its statements, but insinuating them slyly and cautiously, and conveying the mighty intelligence that two persons in Halifax had contributed something—how much dependent sayeth not, to assist Mr. Whelan to advocate annexation. Here is the whole of this immense news. The nutshell has burst, and the important secret is out. Let us examine it a little more closely.

It is a report. So was the statement, put forth some years ago, by this same BILL BLUNT, if we are correctly informed of his identity, that D. Maclean, Esquire, was a runaway Canadian Rebel. From "the channel through which he had" that statement, namely, as he said, the assurance of a person who had known him in Canada, and who detected him while delivering a lecture at the Mechanics' Institute, perhaps he thought there was "little or no room to doubt its authenticity" too. But did it stand the test? And why may not one report be as good as another? If the report that belies Mr. M-Lean be false, why shall we trust that slanders Mr. Whelan, without proof? BILL BLUNT appears to have a particular facility of picking up such stories, and a strong penchant for circulating them again. Whether it is owing to the man's extreme credulity, to a love of tattling, to an appetite for slander, or to an overweening vanity, prompting him to know more than any one else, and to be in possession of every one's secrets, I know not; but certainly he seems particularly clever at discovering everything that is either new, or strange, or monstrous, or ridiculous; and no less clever at circulating it. But who is the author of this report? BILL BLUNT is fond of catechising Mr. Whelan; perhaps he will have no objections to answer a few questions himself. Where then did he hear this "sly report"? Let the public know if there be any good authority for it. Let the importers of it to this Island come honestly before the world, and give us their names, and we shall then know what we have to trust to. A report, indeed! A report from where? When came it? By whom came it? BILL BLUNT, stand forth. You answer, "No matter by whom." Ah! This is not "a little hypocritical, I suppose?" This is not "a kind of getting over the question,—a sort of hang the fellow! what put it into his head to ask me that?" "No matter by whom," indeed! "Allow me to say whatever will suit my purpose,—to slander whom I please. But don't question me: don't demand my authority. That will ruin our cause."

But this is a private report; coming to light, too, long after the commencement of the Palladium. True, BILL BLUNT heard it many months ago; and in even a worse shape than the late edition of it. But it has lain ever since in some of the cavities of his brain in perfect secrecy; and long ago as he first became master of this great state secret, and extensive and organised as is the infamous scheme to "rob us of our constitution, and hand us over to the tender mercies of Nova Scotia," (an awful place, as pitiless as a crocodile); or, as fierce as a she-bear, and as pitiless as a crocodile); yet no individual saving himself has ever yet heard this marvellous story. Now, Sir, allow me to ask, does not the great privacy of this report throw a stigma upon its probability? Have the birds of the air brought it to BILL BLUNT, that he and he only should know it? Besides, several months that he and he only should know it, and to unravel, even to the favoured BILL BLUNT, the mysteries of this company of "audacious, monopolising picaroons," remain in statu quo; there is no new light, and time does not promise to make the thing any clearer. Alas, poor BILL! thy perception must be blunt indeed, if thou canst not see the ridicule thou art likely to bring on thyself.

And why has BILL BLUNT acted such a cowardly part in this case? Why has he slunk behind the covert of an anonymous signature? Why has he declined the editor's invitation to an interview? An individual possessing the important knowledge he professes to, and sustained by good evidence, would have courted investigation, and have confronted every opponent. It will not do to say, that the importance and public nature of the case precluded a private explanation. It precluded, of course, any improper compromise. But the more explanation the better—the more likely to elicit the truth. Why not go honestly to Mr. Whelan, to tell him the report, and hear his defence? BILL BLUNT would still have been at perfect liberty to make public any thing he knew; and he would have understood better how to manage the business. But this he declined. Did he dread to hazard a private interview? I incline to the idea, his real name and face be known? He has exposed himself to offer, a private conversation could only have exposed the leanness of his cause, and destroyed his plea for endeavours to raise a public ferment about nothing. If BILL BLUNT had facts to present he would come out. He has more honest. Doubtless they would come out. He has every disposition to trumpet them, if he possessed them. But having nothing but a few vague hints, derived, perhaps, from the most doubtful sources, and obliged to make capital of these, or wait, what shall he do? Put on a self-confident, bullying tone,—assume to have discovered a great secret,—and endeavour to frighten Mr. Whelan with his mimic thunders.

And what have the volcanic throes and labours of this mountain brought forth? An elephant or a lion? Nay; but a nameless abortion. Where we were promised a revelation of a dark and infamous plot to ruin and enslave our country, we are presented with a peevish story of two individuals in Halifax who are contributors to Mr. Whelan. They "put their hands into their pockets." Aye; and perhaps they took them out again. But they gave Mr. Whelan money. Unpardonable sin! But how much did they give him? Perhaps BILL BLUNT didn't hear that part of the story. But they did this "for the purpose of sacrificing P. E. Island."

Aye! Who told him that, I wonder? What if it was for the purpose of helping P. E. Island, by inducing Mr. Whelan to undertake the task of bearding its devourers in their dens? Does BILL BLUNT know to the contrary? No. He has only a "sly report," possibly true, probably not, that two men in Halifax gave Mr. Whelan money to induce him to come here to advocate annexation. And what two men were these, pray? And what do they hope to gain by our annexation to them? What wonders two men could do in such a case; and what an inducement to Mr. Whelan would be their contributions! Oh tempora! oh mores! What a mare's nest BILL BLUNT has discovered! What a beautifully consistent, credible, and ingenious story he has put forth!

But the climax is to come yet. Edward Whelan thus employed, paid, sent to this Island, to advocate its annexation to the government of Nova Scotia, has remained for eight months perfectly silent on the subject! Scarcely a sentence has appeared in his paper in favour of such a step, and not a single one from his own pen. Here is one fact; and it is sufficient to destroy a thousand volumes of such vapouring as BILL BLUNT has put forth. Is it credible, is it possible, that the Palladium should have been established to advocate annexation, and yet in eight months never advert to that subject? Did this idea never strike BILL BLUNT? 'Tis certainly a wondrous pity the man wouldn't think. Is it not time to attack Mr. Whelan as the advocate of annexation, when he shall have become guilty? Or, if he must be assailed, at any rate, why not make some of his real sentiments the occasion? I blush for BILL BLUNT, and the miserable crew he represents. If they have no discernment, what have they done with their consciences? Are honour and honesty things which can entirely dispense with in their political pursuits; that thus they sacrifice them to the opportunist of maligning and injuring a political opponent? The Palladium may be wrong. But wrong or right, BILL BLUNT's pretended charge is only a machination to destroy a popularity which the partisans of misgovernment dread, but which they have tried in vain to check. And what a scheme have they fallen upon! It is not that its editor has done wrong, or that he is doing wrong; but that he was sent here to do wrong. His public career is unnoticed; his political sentiments are unattacked, and a mere unsubstantiated report of something which he was employed to do, but NEVER did, is made the ground of assault, and the cause of filthy ribaldry and vituperation. Oh dignitas! oh prulentia! whither have ye fled, that meanness and folly should have thus become instated in your wonted thrones? and frothy braggadoos presume to condemn without evidence the trusted servants and friends of the public!

And forsooth, Mr. Whelan must not feel indignant at such treatment. Every inquisitive anybody that wishes to pry into his business must be indulged, and he must be quite gentle under the indignity. And if he dares to show any spirit, the impertinent inquisitor will immediately begin to boast of the "high temper into which he hammered his metal." But this sily brag has betrayed BILL BLUNT. The public now understand his motive in attacking Mr. Whelan:—it was to irritate him, and then turn his resentment into an argument against himself. And he thinks he has succeeded. Poor blind man! he forgets that the indignant contempt which spurns the snarling cur, is quite a different feeling from the malignant anger of detected guilt. He is himself the netted party;—mortified that his assault has not been effectual in provoking Mr. Whelan to take more notice of him. His vanity is stung, and he cannot conceal his vexation. Poor man!

Yes; BILL BLUNT has "elicited the fact to admiration," no doubt. But what fact is it? The fact of the existence of a dark and malignant plot. But its locality and design are different from the plot BILL BLUNT strives to persuade us exists. It is a plot hatched in Charlottetown to ruin the Palladium. This is the plot, Sir. "It is now before the public," in the most unequivocal shape. To use BILL BLUNT's own language, "I have performed my duty. It now remains for those who are interested, to say whether they will allow their noses to be cut off to spite their faces," or manifest their disapprobation of such a line of conduct."

Leaving BILL BLUNT to "the tender mercies" of the public and his own conscience, I remain, Sir,

Yours truly,

CRITIQUE.

The Schr. Swan, W. P. Nelmcs, Master, arrived on Sunday afternoon, in 11 days from Bermuda. Saw a barque at anchor in the Gut of Canso, supposed to be the Mary Jane, bound to Casimbarque. There was a large fleet of vessels lying in Ship Harbour, bound up the Gulf, but they could not proceed in consequence of the passage being choked up with ice. It was with great difficulty that the Swan made her way through it, and it was only by chance that she succeeded. Seals were seen in great numbers.

LAUNCHED.

This morning, from the Steam-mill Wharf, a beautiful, copper-fastened vessel, of 180 tons burthen, called the GULNARE, built by Messrs. Peake and Duncan, for W. Stevenson, Esq., of Quebec. She was christened by Lady Huntley in the usual manner, and glided off the launchways, amid the shouts of the spectators, in fine style. This splendid vessel is intended for the Surveying Service, and will be immediately placed under the command of Captain Bayfield, R. N. We regret to have to add, that by some accident, one of the seamen belonging to the vessel had his left hand shattered to pieces in a dreadful manner, and was otherwise badly injured, by the discharge of a brass gun, at the minute the vessel began to move off the launchways.

From the Building yard of Mr. Robert Orr, New Glasgow, on Saturday, the 11th inst., the beautifully built Schooner Cambria, of the burden of 84 tons.
