

Revolt In Red Satellites Highlighted Developments

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

The sudden, unannounced appearance in Warsaw of Nikita Khrushchev and a retinue of Soviet bigwigs was the tipoff that something out of the ordinary was in the wind. Then the news broke with big headlines reminiscent of the war years. First Poland, then Hungary.

In Warsaw, it quickly became known the Poles were defying the Russian leaders. Soviet troops stationed in Poland began moving in menacing "manoeuvres." A new Polish strong man emerged - Wladyslaw Gomulka, recently released from jail. Soviet Marshal Rokossovsky was ousted from the Polish Politburo. The net result: Poland stayed Communist but won the right to direct her own affairs.

Poland's victory whipped up patriotic sentiment in Hungary. The government toppled. As in Poland, a new strong man, Imre Nagy, took over. But in Hungary the situation quickly got out of hand. What started out on Tuesday as street demonstrations in Budapest developed into a full-blown revolt. These were not Communists struggling for power among themselves, but patriots fighting for independence. Some Hungarian army units went over to the rebels. Soviet armed forces garrisoned in Hungary were in action.

In the Western capitals, fear was widespread that the uprising could end only in a blood bath.

NORTH AFRICA

Arab leaders of Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia had planned a conference in Tunis. The Sultan of Morocco was already there. The five chief leaders of the Algerian rebellion against the French were flying in from Morocco. But they never arrived.

By a ruse, the French pilot of the airliner in which they were travelling put the plane down at Algiers. Instead of a welcoming committee, the rebel leaders found French troops waiting with handcuffs.

The capture of the rebel chiefs was a victory for the French fighting to put down the Algerian revolt. But it reacted against the Sultan of Morocco regarded the incident as an affront to his dignity. Rioting broke out in many Moroccan towns. More than 50 French were slain in the city of Meknes alone.

TWO ACCIDENTS

Near Orillia, two couples on their way to a dance were in an automobile which missed a curve and dropped into the Black River. Both women were drowned. One left nine motherless children, the other four. The husbands escaped. In Sigourney, Iowa, a grade-crossing accident took the lives of eight children, all members of one family and including two sets of twins.

STUDENT MARCH

Quebec City had a student demonstration. About 1,000 undergraduates from Laval University marched on the legislative buildings seeking an interview with Premier Duplessis. They wanted to press for more financial aid for education.

The premier refused to see a delegation but later agreed to a meeting at a future date. Duplessis has refused federal aid for Quebec universities on the grounds education is a provincial responsibility.

U.S. ELECTION

The presidential election campaign in the United States ended its next to last week. The public opinion polls showed President Eisenhower holding a lead over his opponent, Adlai Stevenson. But many political experts looked for a close contest. Voting is Tuesday, Nov. 6.

Foreign policy, the merits of a man on H-bomb tests, and the military draft continued to dominate the campaign. Stevenson saw a ban on H-bomb tests as the best means of ensuring peace. Eisenhower, rejecting this idea, backed peace through strength as the safest policy.

TIMELY NOTES ON FUR TOPICS

Quality not quantity will be the effective foil against falling mink prices and the threat of foreign competition according to speakers at the fall meeting of the Great Lakes Mink Association which took place in Chicago last week. "Don't increase your mink production and don't pile up your pelts. Just make them better," advised Elmer Herron, Kansasville, Wis., chairman of the GLMA Marketing Board in his report to approximately 200 members at the Congress Hotel. He was supported by such auction company representatives as Barry Coward, president of the Hudson's Bay Co. Fur Sales, Inc., New York, who reported that ordinary dark mink cannot now be produced profitably because of the squeeze from Scandinavian mink. Fine mink, on the other hand, will be a good seller, according to Mr. Coward, who called last year's price "satisfactory" and "likely to continue."

FOR MINK

In Zanesville, Ohio, "the girls are all holding out for mink," at least that was the statement made by Joe Nodell when he brought to the Orpha Fur Specialty Shop a collection of stoles, jackets and coats. The proprietors said women definitely prefer mink and if they haven't the money they are saving it up with a purchase in mind. All the girls who are working talk mink and are determined to own something in that fur.

We had a surprise visit on Tuesday from John A. Lea, who will be fox breeders and authorities on silver foxes years ago. Mr. Lea developed a strain of bright silvers that were top winners at the Royal Winter Fair and other exhibitions, and he furnished the foundation stock for some of the most successful ranches in the U. S. A. and Canada. Some years ago he became connected with the Bergman Construction Company and has had a responsible position with them ever since, his locality being in Northern Ontario near where uranium mining is conducted. John Lea is fresh and youthful and hasn't forgotten the athletic activities of his early days. It was nice to see him, even if it was only for a short time, and talk over the grand old days of fox farming.

PM Has Had No Reply From Drew

OTTAWA (CP)—Prime Minister St. Laurent, who a month ago asked Hon. George Drew to continue in public life in some public post, said Thursday he has had no reply from the former Progressive Conservative leader.

The prime minister was asked by reporters following a cabinet meeting whether there has been any reply from Mr. Drew, who resigned the Conservative leadership in September because of ill health.

Mr. St. Laurent replied "No," and added that while he has heard nothing directly about Mr. Drew's health he understands it is "still improving."

A month ago he told reporters that he had telephoned Mr. Drew, then in hospital in Toronto, and expressed the wish that he continue in public service. The prime minister said he had in mind the senate "and some other positions."

Army Historian Declares New Book On Dieppe Is Inaccurate

OTTAWA (CP)—Col. C. F. Stacey, the Canadian Army's chief historian, says a new book on the Dieppe raid "cannot be relied upon as an accurate account."

Col. Stacey reviews the 215-page book, Dieppe Raid by the English journalist R. W. Thompson, in the current issue of The Canadian Army Journal. The book was published earlier this year.

The army historian says the book contains more details about the Dieppe raid by the Canadians in August, 1942, than any other account available to the public. "However," he adds, "a great many of these details are wrong."

Col. Stacey cites these examples, among others:

HEARSAY DETAILS

"This is a pity, for it is clear that he the author was acquainted with later and more reliable accounts; but he was apparently in too much of a hurry to take the trouble to sift the grain from the chaff. As a result of basing his story mainly on the 1942 report he has incorporated in it many hearsay details which now are known to have no basis in fact."

Col. Stacey cites these examples, among others:

Two Captains Lose Tickets

LONDON (Reuters)—The captains of two British cargo ships, which collided in the North Sea last February with the loss of eight lives, have had their master's certificates suspended as a result of a ministry of transport inquiry.

The court of inquiry report published Thursday found that the collision was caused by "the fault or default of those in charge of both ships."

Captains were William Pinchbeck of the 7,000-ton city of Sydney, who received a year's suspension, and Ernest Northcott of the 2,300-ton Corchester, which sank with the loss of eight crew members. Northcott's certificate was suspended three months.

Jet Overtakes Its Own Shells

WASHINGTON (AP)—The navy said Thursday a supersonic jet fighter overtook cannon shells it had fired and was damaged so badly it crashed.

Navy officers said the Sept. 21 accident was unprecedented but has resulted in a revision of fighter attack techniques.

The plane, a Grumman F11F1 carrier-based fighter, was badly damaged in a crash landing after its own gunfire had damaged its wing and engine.

Two admirals related details of the accident at a luncheon of the Aviation Writers Association. Earlier the Baltimore Evening Sun had reported the freak accident.

FLYING AT 800 M.P.H.

In a story by Donald Bremner, the paper says the accident occurred while the pilot was testing new 20-mm. cannons over the Atlantic Ocean near Long Island.

"I put his jet into a shallow dive at a speed of 800 m.p.h. some 13,000 feet above the water and fired at our second burst from his cannons. After a pause, he fired another four-second burst.

As he finished the second round of firing, an object shattered the bullet-proof glass in his windshield. Thinking he had rammed a bird, Attridge headed for a landing field.

But unknown to the pilot, a second shell had pierced his jet engine which failed, causing the jet to crash. The 33-year-old pilot was taken to hospital with a fractured leg and three broken vertebrae.

PROBABLE EXPLANATION

Bremner says the navy gave this probable explanation of the accident:

When the stream of cannon shells spewed from the four guns at the rate of 1,000 rounds a minute, or better than 64 rounds for each four-second burst, they were travelling more than 1,500 feet a second faster than the airplane.

But they immediately began to slow down because of air resistance and to fall from the firing path because of gravity, so that they were following a curved course toward the ocean.

The jet meanwhile went into a slightly steeper dive and about two to three miles from the point where the firing began, the plane and the spent shells arrived at the same point and collided.

MEETS DRAMA FESTIVAL DIRECTOR

Mr. Richard "Dick" MacDonald, Director of the Dominion Drama Festival, with headquarters at Ottawa, arrived in Charlottetown by train Friday evening for a weekend conference with the chairman and governors of the Prince Edward Island Regional Committee of the Dominion Drama Festival.

Mr. MacDonald was met last evening by Mr. Joek Lawson, RIGHT, Charlottetown, who is chairman of the P.E.I. Regional committee of the Dominion Drama Festival. The Dominion director came here from Halifax and will continue on his annual Canadian tour Monday, when he goes to Bathurst where the New Brunswick Regional Festival will be held next year. This year, in contrast to last, he has made his Western calls first and has also completed his visits in the Atlantic Provinces with the exception of New Brunswick.

Mr. MacDonald visits the different regions for the purpose of aiding the committees to solve problems which come up from time to time concerning committee activities. Mr. Lawson stated that one of the main problems facing the local committee was its difficulty in getting three plays each festival can be staged. He also noted that another problem at hand is that of filling several governor vacancies.
