Provinces Planning Busy Sessions Of Legislation

By The Canadian Press

Manitoba, British Columbia and Newfoundland will consider problems of electoral redistribution during forthcoming legislative sessions.

One of the major pieces of legislation scheduled for the 1955 session, Newfoundland's Redistribution Bill would provide seats for four additional members.

Overhauling the electoral districts is expected to produce heavy debate in Manitoba. British Columbia's Social Credit government will also submit a plan for redistribution.

A Canadian Press survey shows that the British Columbia legislature will be the first to open a new session in 1955. It will meet Jan. 25. Quebec convened Nov. 17 and went back Jan. 11 after the Christmas and New Year's recess.

Other opening dates: Nova Scotia, Feb. 25; Prince Edward Island and Ontario, Feb. 8; Manitoba, Feb. 1; Alberta, Feb. 17; Saskatchewan and New Brunswick, Feb. 10. Newfoundland's legislature opens about mid-March.

The Alberta House will deal with provincial aid to municipalities and celebration of the province's 50th anniversary.

A busy Quebec legislature has already increased housing and farm credit funds by $10,000,000, appointed six Parliamentary assistants, passed a bill to aid rural electrification and extended provincial rent controls to May, 1956.

The new term is expected to produce debate on the record $331,000,000 budget for 1955-56 and an attempt to block stock racketeering by providing stiffer fines and appointing a three-man commission for life to control securities trading.

The Ontario session is expected to be the last before a general provincial election. Although the Province of Ontario is expected to keep business going.

Says Built-In Stabilizers Help Ward Off Depression

By FORBES RHUDE
Canadian Press Business Editor

National City Bank of New York says in its January letter that 1954 demonstrated the ability of the American economy to work out a re-adjustment in an orderly manner, without large-scale deficit spending.

The year also supplied a better insight, the letter states, into three influences which helped avert depression this time and might do so again—the "built-in" stabilizers in the economy, the character of demand, and confidence in the long-run trend.

Although, in the United States, wages and salaries dropped by $3,000,000,000 in the first 10 months of 1954, compared with the same period of 1953, rise in government payments for unemployment insurance, social security and veterans' benefits off-set nearly two-thirds of the drop.

With these and other factors, including a drop in personal tax liabilities, income after taxes and consumer spending both rose to new highs.

W.C.T.U. NOTES

A HELP IN TIME OF TEMPTATION
Lesson V
Somehow the moonlight seemed not quite so bright as it had been. Joyce hadn't noticed at first, but it must have grown dimmer for she looked twice and couldn't make sure that Jerry, her twin brother, was there on the car seat beside her. Sir Alcohol, their strange little new friend, seemed to have disappeared altogether.
It had suddenly grown colder. Her bare feet felt quite cold, and although Sir Alcohol had boasted that he could keep things from freezing and was very useful in car radiators, she just couldn't see where he could pour himself into her feet to keep them from freezing.
"Jerry," she whispered softly. But there was no response. Timidly, for it really was much darker than she remembered it being a few minutes earlier, she reached out to where he had been sitting beside her. Yes, there he was. She knew the smooth feel of his new blue pyjamas. But she could not see him, not at first. Then as her eyes grew accustomed to the darkness, she could see the outline of his head against the car window. No, it wasn't the car window! The car wasn't there at all! Neither was the shaft of moonlight leading down to the table.
Carefully Joyce felt along the back of the seat on which they sat. It wasn't softly padded as the seat of the new car had been. It was hard, like a window ledge. It was a window ledge. And the noise she heard in the stillness wasn't the purring of a well-oiled motor engine. It was the regular breathing of her twin brother.
"Jerry, Jerry, wake up!" She didn't whisper this time and when Jerry did not speak at once she shook him. "Jerry," she called again, her voice trembling with fear, "wake up, Jerry. The car's gone and it's all dark."
"Gone! I didn't know it had come yet," Jerry rubbed his eyes and sat up. "You fell asleep after watching for ever so short a time, but I've been waiting and watching to see if drive in."
"But it was in. Right on the table there, and Sir Alcohol said it was part his because he helped so much in making it and keeping it right. I can't see how he got out of the room again without us seeing it go. And how ever did we get out?"
"Out of what?" Jerry's tone was impatient. "We weren't going out. We were just going to look out until the new car drove into the yard. I don't believe it's coming till morning now. Let's hurry up to bed."
"But he may come back — Sir Alcohol, I mean, to tell us more about — about athletes."
"What athletes?"
"You remember, Syl Apps —"
"The hockey coach?" interrupted Jerry.
"Of course, I see him on the television broadcasts."
"I know, you said that before."
"I didn't. We hadn't been talking about him before."
"You couldn't have been listening when Sir Alcohol —"
"Sir who?"
"Well he told you to call him Al, but I said call him Sir Alcohol. He is very proud of Syl Apps because he doesn't like Al. That sounds funny, put it really isn't. Sir Alcohol is proud of any athlete, or of anyone else, who does not let him get inside. He says he does lots of good outside things that he never before was ashamed of."

Then because, in some way she could not understand, Jerry did not seem to remember any of the things Sir Alcohol had been telling them, Joyce told him all over again.
"I'm rather sorry now that I said he looked like a bottle when his hat was straight. He'd so much rather be in a 'w' radiator or locked up in a 'w' radiator or than poured out... a bottle for someone to drink. He doesn't want to get inside people at all. He's much too dangerous."
"Dangerous!"
"Yes. He's just like poison. He said so himself. Isn't it queer that people will take him—alcohol, I mean—to drink when they'd never think of drinking the kind of poison that Daddy puts on the rose bushes when he sprays them, or the strange smelling poison Mother keeps in the blue bottle in the medicine cabinet?"
"That's because they know they're poison," defended Jerry.
"They know alcohol is, too. At least we know because Sir Al told us so himself and was ashamed of it."
"Well, were not taking it. Even if it doesn't really poison me I don't want my arms and legs to stop being elastic, the way you said."
"It isn't the arms and legs; it's the muscles that make them move, and the muscles get their orders to move from the nerves that carry all sorts of messages from the brain. You remember Miss Wray explained all that to us in school, but Sir Alcohol seemed to make it plainer. And he was so sorry."
"I should think he would be ashamed, whoever he is."
"You know who he is, Jerry Burton. You sat here—no, not here, in the car, I mean—and talked to him for ever so long."
"But the car isn't here," declared Jerry. "It hasn't come yet."
"Well, someone — someone who looked like a bottle and said his name was Sir Al—Sir Alcohol — told us ever so many things. He was very, very interesting, even if he sometimes is such a bad friend to people. He honestly doesn't want to get into anyone's business and then into the brain so that it can't tell the hundreds of little nerves to tell the muscles what to do. He cried about it once. "Did he tell you how one could stop him getting in at all?" In spite of his doubts about his twin having experienced all the things she was telling him, Jerry was becoming interested. "That would have been something worth listening to."

"No I can't remember him telling me that. He spoke as if there was nothing he could do about it. He said one just had to be strong enough and swift enough to run away from him. But I told him about our Sunday School Purpose and how the minister prayed after we had signed that each of us might be given the courage and strength to always say 'No' to alcohol. That's something we can do. We can ask God to make us strong enough to keep Sir Al out and swift enough to run away from him, and from all other temptations as well. Sir Al would so much rather be good and make people's lives happier and easier and more comfortable by being a good mixer—the right sort of a good mixer."
"Would it be all right to ask God right now to make us strong

Words For The World

The Revelation which, from time immemorial, hath been acclaimed as the Purpose and Promise of all the Prophets of God, and the most cherished Desire of His Messengers, HATH NOW, by virtue of the pervasive Will of the Almighty and at His irresistible bidding, been revealed to men. The advent of such a Revelation hath been heralded in all the sacred Scriptures.

Words of Baha'u'llah in "Baha'i World Faith"
