In a short time the alarming symptons had disappeared, and to-day he considers himself completely free from the painful complaint, without likelihood of its recurrence. Yet he is never without a supply of this valuable panacea, and has it ready for use.

The peroration alluding to the late President Garfield was sublime." This will be Mr. Fletcher's last lecture on the Island, for the present, at least, as he leaves to-morrow for Colorado. Doors open at 7. Lecture begins at 8 o'clock. Music by the choir.
