GREAT DRY GOODS SALE.

We intend to make extensive alterations in our premises next spring, and a change in our business, and to do this must clear out our entire stock of Dry Goods, Clothing, Carpets, &c., &c.

To dispose of this immense stock within so short a time, it must be sold at a sacrifice, and we shall therefore, give discounts varying from 20 up to 30 per cent.

The stock consists of Seasonable and Fashionable Goods, which are all marked in plain figures, and at prices that are well known to be the lowest in the market.

This Sale will be for CASH ONLY.

GREAT DRY GOODS SALE

AND OPENING OF THE WINTER CAMPAIGN.

We find our premises are at present entirely too small for our increasing trade, and contemplate adding to the rear of our large store a two-storey brick building

In order to do this it is not necessary to advertise such enormous discounts off our already very Low Prices, as the public are well aware that our prices are away below those who are continually advertising 20, 30 and 40 per cent discount.

FOR CASH

We guarantee as much Dry Goods for one dollar as any store in the city.

CHAPTER XVIII.

There was a loud jubilee and shout of applause among the guests, who were (some of them at least) better pleased with Magnus Troil's latitudinarian principles with respect to the public revenue, (which were extremely natural to those living in so secluded a situation, and subjected to many additional exactions,) than they had been with the rigour of his judgment on the subject of wrecked goods. But Minna's inexperienced feelings carried her farther than her father, while she whispered to Brenda, not unheard by Cleveland, that the tame spirit of the Oradians had missed every chance which late incidents had given them to emancipate these Islands from the Scotch yoke.

"Why," she said, "should we not, under so many changes as late times have introduced, have seized the opportunity to shake off an allegiance which is justly due from us, and to return to the protection of Denmark, our parent country? Why should we yet hesitate to do this, but that the gentry of Orkney have mixed families and friendship so much with our invaders, that they have become dead to the throbs of the heroic Norse blood, which they derived from their ancestors?"

The latter part of this patriotic speech happened to reach the astonished ears of our friend Triptolemus, who, having a sincere devotion for the Protestant succession, and the Revolution as established, was surprised into the ejaculation, "As the old cook crows the young cock learns—hen I should say, mistress, and I crave your pardon if I say any thing amiss in either gender. But it is a happy country where the father declares against the king's crown, and, in my judgment, it can end in nothing but trees and town."

"Trees are scarce among us," said Magnus, "and for ropes, we need them for our rigging, and cannot spare them to be shirt collars."

"And whoever," said the Captain, "takes umbrage at what this young lady says, had better keep his ears and tongue for a safer employment than such an adventure."

"Ay, ay," said Triptolemus, "it helps the matter much to speak truths, which are as un- welcome to a proud stomach as wet clover to a cow's, in a land where lads are ready to draw the whistle if a lassie but looks awry. But what matters are to be expected in a country where folk call a plough-sock a mark!"

"Hark ye, Master Yellowley," said the Captain, smiling, "I hope my manners are not among those abuses which you come hither to reform; any experiment on them may be dangerous."

As well as difficult," said Triptolemus, dryly; but fear nothing, Captain Cleveland, from my remonstrances. My labors regard the men and things of the earth, and not the men and things of the sea—you are not of my element."

"Let us be friends, then, old clod-compeller," said the Captain.

"Clod-compeller!" said the agriculturist, bethinking himself of the lore of his earlier days; "Clod-compeller pro clod-compeller—Grocum est—in which voyage came you by that phrase?"

"I have travelled books as well as seas in my day," said the Captain; "but my last voyages have been of a sort to make me forget my earlier cruises through classic knowledge."

—But come here, Bryce—last cast off the lashing?—Come all hands, and let us see if he has aught in his cargo that is worth looking upon.

With a prond, and, at the same time, a wily smile, did the crafty pedlar display a collection of wares far superior to those which usually filled his packages, and, in particular some stuffs and embroideries, of such beauty and curiosity, fringed, flowered and worked, with such art and magnificence, upon foreign and arabesque patterns, that the sight might have dazzled a far more brilliant company than the simple race of Thule. All beheld and admired, while Mistress Baby Yellowley, holding up her hands, protested it was a sin even to look upon such extravagance, and worse than murder so much as to ask the price of them.

Others, however, were more courageous; and the price demanded by the merchant, if they were not as he himself declared, something just more than nothing—short only of an absolute free gift of his wares, were nevertheless so moderate, as to show that he himself must have made an easy acquisition of the goods, judging by the rate at which he offered to part with them. Accordingly, the cheapness of the articles created a rapid sale; for in Zealand, as well as elsewhere, wise folk buy more from the prudential desire to secure a good bargain, than from any real occasion for the purchase. The Lady Glowworm bought seven petticoats and twelve stomachers on this sole principle, and other matrons present rivalled her in this sagacious species of economy. The Udaller was also a considerable purchaser; but the principal customer for whatever could please the eye of beauty, was the gallant Captain Cleveland, who rummaged the jagger's stores in selecting presents for the ladies of the party, in which Minna and Brenda Troil were specially remembered.

"I fear," said Magnus Troil, "that the young women are to consider these pretty presents as keepsakes, and that all this liberality is only a sure sign we are to lose you?"

This question seemed to embarrass him to whom it was put.

"I scarce know," he said, with some hesitation, "whether this vessel is my consort or no—I must take a trip to Kirkwall fair, to settle with the merchants I have consigned my fish to, and I have often promised Minna and Brenda that they should see the fair. Perhaps also your consort, or these strangers, whoever they be, may have some merchandise that will suit me. I love to see my rigging-loft well stocked with goods, almost as much as to see it full of dancers. We will go to Orkney in my own brig, and I can offer you a hammock, if you will."

Esprit de Corps and Scottish Regiments.

The clannish feelings of Scotsmen are, of course, well known, and have been illustrated many times; but the latest, and probably one of the most advantageous results of this esprit de corps has been instanced in the manner the Highland regiments in Britain have recruited since the introduction of the localization scheme. The 95th Highlanders do not accept any man who was born south of the Tweed, the 42nd (the Black Watch) and the 26th (Cameronians) will not admit any men to their ranks except they come from Scottish parents, while the 78th (the Ross-shire Buffs), the Cameron Highlanders and the Gordon Highlanders recruit only in their districts. The reports from the regimental depots state that county men are now coming for enlistment in the regiments named after their counties or clans, and the standard of these regiments—always good—is now even improving, from a physical and educational standpoint. At the present time the 1st Seaforth Highlanders is, says the Scottish Leader, perhaps the most representative Highland battalion in the service. Its full strength is 814, made up as follows: Scottish, 669; English, 115; Welsh, Irish, and Colonial, 30. Of the above, 251 speak the Gaelic, hailing from the Western and Island clans and whose mother tongue is the good old tongue; 107 speak their own language, but learned English and speak it better than the Gaelic; 91 are from the central districts and only speak a little of the Scottish tongue; the remainder are Lowlanders, but bear the patronymics of Highland and border clans, claiming Celtic ancestry; 184 of these bear the Celtic prefix Mac. Amongst the clans the most numerously represented is the one that was the most powerful in the old days—before Bishop MacDonald brought out his faithful followers in 1786 to Canada, and before the Rev. Father McRae and McDonnell went out to New Zealand as pioneers to the hundreds who now farm the southern Island—the MacDonalds, 24. There are: McKenzies, 19; Frasers, 19; Mackays, 15; Campbells, 15; Ross, 10; the clan Chattan (Macphersons and Mackintoshes) 10; Stuarts, 10; Munros, Camerons, Sutherlands, 26; and among the Island clans of the Outer Hebrides who were formerly the vassals of the great Earls of Seaforth, Macleods, 23; Macleans, 15; Morrisons, 10; Macivors, Macaulays, Macskills, Macullochs, Finlaysons, 19. When the regiment was raised by the Earl of Seaforth, there were 420 Macraes in its ranks, but most of that clan are now in this country or in New Zealand. There are but four representatives of this clan now in this regiment. About a third are Roman Catholics, the remainder, with the exception of 134 are Presbyterians. Fort George and the other centres in Scotland are doing much by the presence of the kilted regiments there to dispel the prejudice once entertained against the service, owing to the presence of regiments other than Scottish, and recruits now join the colors in great numbers, every month.
