FOUL PLAY.

By Charles Reade.

CHAPTER LV.

The poor girl was half-fainting at the sight of the man who had destroyed her Robert and owned it.

"No, no," she cried hastily; "let me get away—let me get away from here—you cruel, cruel man!"

She tottered to the door, and got to her carriage, she scarcely knew how, without the information she went for.

"The bill-broker was no fool; he saw now how the land lay; he followed her down the stairs and tried to stammer excuses.

"Charing Cross Hotel," said she faintly, and laid her face against the cushion to avoid the sight of him.

When she got home, she cried bitterly at her feminine weakness and her incapacity; and she entered this pitiable failure in her journal with a severity our male readers will hardly, we think, be disposed to imitate; and she added, by way of comment:
"in this how I carry out my poor Robert's precept: Be obstinate as a man, be supple as a woman!"

That night she consulted her father on this difficulty, so slight to any but an inexperienced girl. He told her there must be a report of the trial in the newspapers, and the report would probably mention the counsel; she had better consult a file.

Then the wife was where to find a file.
After one or two failures, the British Museum was suggested. She went thither, and could not get in to read without certain formalities. While these were being complied with, she was at a standstill.

That same evening came a line from Mr.
Arthur Wardlaw:

"DEAREST HELEN: I hear from Mr.
Adams that you desire to know the name of the counsel who defended Robert Pen-fold. It was Mr. Tollemache. He has chambers in Lincoln's Inn

"Ever devotedly yours,
"ARTHUR WARDLAW."

Helen was touched with this letter, and put it away indorsed with a few words of gratitude and esteem, and copied it into her diary and remarked: "This is one more warning not to judge hastily.
Arthur's agitation was probably only great emotion at the sudden mention of one whose innocence he believes, and whose sad fate distresses him." She wrote back and thanked him sweetly, and in terms that encouraged a visit. Next day she went to Mr. Tollemache. A seedy man followed her at a distance. Mr. Tollemache was not at his chambers, nor expected till four o'clock. He was in the court. She left her card and wrote on it in pencil that she would call at four.

She went at ten minutes after four. Mr.
Tollemache declined through his clerk to see her if she was a client; he could only be approached by her solicitor. She felt inclined to go away and cry, but this time she remembered she was not to be obstinate as a man and supple as a woman.
She wrote on a card "I am not a client of Mr. Tollemache, but a lady deeply interested in obtaining some information which Mr. Tollemache can, with perfect propriety, give me. I trust to his courtesy as a gentleman not to refuse me a short interview."

"Admit the lady," said a sharp little voice.

She was ushered in, and found Mr. Tol-lemache standing before the fire.

"Now, madam, what can I do for you?"

"Some years ago you defended Mr.
Robert Penfold; he was accused of forgery."

"Oh, was he! I think I remember something about it. A banker's clerk—wasn't he?"

"Oh, no, sir. A clergyman."

"A clergyman. I remember it perfectly.
He was convicted."

"Do you think he was guilty, sir?"

"There was a strong case against him."

"I wish to sift that case."

"Indeed. And you want to go through the papers?"

"What papers, sir?"

"The brief for the defence."

"Yes," said Helen, boldly; "would you trust me with that, sir? Oh, if you knew how deeply I am interested! The tears were in her lovely eyes."

"The brief has gone back to the solicitor, of course. I dare say he will let you read it upon a proper representation."

"Thank you, sir. Will you tell me who is the solicitor and where he lives?"

"Oh, I can't remember who was the solicitor. That is the very first thing you ought to have ascertained. It was no use coming to me."

"Forgive me for troubling you, sir," said Helen, with a deep sigh.

"Not at all, madam; I am only sorry I cannot be of more service. But do let me advise you to employ your solicitor to make these preliminary inquiries. Happy to consult with him, and re-open the matter should he discover any fresh evidence." He bowed her out, and sat down to a brief while she was yet in sight.

She turned away heart-sick. The advice she had received was good; but she shrank from baring her heart to her father's solicitor.

She sat disconsolate awhile, then ordered another cab, and drove to Wardlaw's office.
It was late, and Arthur was gone home, so, indeed, was everybody, except one young subordinate, who was putting up the shutters. "Sir, said she, 'can you tell me where old Mr. Penfold lives?'"

"Somewhere in the suburbs, miss."

"Yes, sir; but where?"

"I think it is out Pimlico way."

"Could you not give me the street? I would beg you to accept a present if you could."

This sharpened the young gentleman's wits.

Pimlico. She gave him a sovereign, to his infinite surprise and delight, and told the cabman to drive to the hotel.

The next moment the man who had followed her was chatting familiarly with the subordinate, and helping him to put up the shutters.

"I say, Dick," said the youngster, "Pen-fold is up in the market, a duchess was here just now and gave me a sov, to tell her where he lived. Wait a moment till I spit on it for luck!"

The agent, however, did not wait to witness that interesting ceremony. He went back to his hansom around the corner, and drove at once to Arthur Wardlaw's house with the information.

Helen noted down Michael Penfold's address in her diary, and would have gone to him that evening, but she was to dine tete-a-tete with her father.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

MY DEAR SIR,—Having but recently arrived in this Colony I have only just become aware that it is customary to acknowledge, through the press, the receipt of the gifts which the good people are in the habit of making to their clergymen, charitable institutions, etc. To make all possible amends for my seeming negligence in this respect, I beg herewith to enclose you, for publication, a list of useful, valuable, and ornamental articles, with which I was donated (to use an Americanism) soon after my induction. I have, unfortunately, forgotten the names of my benefactors, but I beg that each one will take credit for that on account of which he has made me his debtor.

Believe me,
My dear Sir,
Yours very faithfully,
GUY DE MONTGOMERIE,
M. A., Cantab.

S. Etheldreda's Church, Quintagesima Sunday,
and Feast of S. Matthias, 1884.

The Reverend Guy de Montgomerie, M.
A. Cantab., late Curate of Aristruthercum-Eglington, Ashes-under-Lime, England, who has recently taken charge of the long-neglected Parish of Riggs' Woods, desires to offer most grateful thanks for the following gifts, viz:

Chappelle's Almanac for 1878.
2 cups and one saucer (stone China).
Map of Greece.
1 bottle Mrs. Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.
2 China dogs and a prayer book.
5 clothes pins and a spittoon.
1 jug of hot water.
1 jar mulligaturney soup.
1 pot of pansies and a parasol.
1 sedan chair and some worm candy.
2 clay pipes and a clothesline.
2 nutmeg graters and a doormat.
1 fire escape and a seltzogene.
1 perambulator and an embroidered stole.
1 picture of "Ben Butler."
1 dozen herring and a duster.
1 bible and a teapot.
1 toboggan and a pint of linnetjuice.
1 bar soap and some old linen (clean).
1 tamborine and a rag mat.
1 bottle goose-grease and a paper of pins.
1 handbell and Darwin on "Primeval Man."
17 pairs slippers and a worked text.
A lot empty bottles and a washub.

The Eruption of Mount Aetna.

Mount Aetna, Sicily, is again in a state of eruption. Up to the present almost sixty eruptions of Mount Aetna are recorded, the most notable within the last hundred years being those of 1792, 1811, 1819 and 1831. The first of these continued an entire year, the streams of lava then being thirty feet deep.
During the last one mentioned there opened on the sides of the mountain many fuming mouths in the midst of tremendous explosions and convulsions, prodigious discharges of ashes, cinders and lava which overran miles of cultivated fields and threatened the town of Bron with ruin.
The river of lava was then twenty miles long, over a mile wide, and forty feet deep.
The lava which in 1669 overtopped the walls of Chatanin may still be seen coiling over their summit like a frozen torrent. On that occasion much of the city and 15,000 of its inhabitants were destroyed.
The earliest eruption mentioned in history was 476 years before the christian era. Four years later a vast volume of water is reported to have rushed down the mountain side. It was supposed to have come from the crater, showing, apparently, the connection between the volcano and the sea. A great eruption occurred in 1862, when mighty clouds of ash-grey dust were expelled, covering the whole surrounding country. From two new mouths on the eastern flank issued torrents of lava—one moving toward Zaffarana, the other toward Giarra. One stream was two miles broad, in some places 170 feet deep, flowed 600 feet in an hour ordinarily, but when it approached abrupt cliffs it dashed over like a fiery cascade. An eruption occurred last year, beginning on February 23, and lasted until March 31, when it ceased. A few days afterwards a severe shock of earthquake took place at Riposto, and two slight shocks occurred at Catania, on the slope of the mountain. The summit of Aetna, being above the line of vegetation, presents, unless covered with snow, a melancholy waste of lava ashes, lapilli, and scorriae, from the centre of which, in a desolate plain, ascends the principal cone. Around the base of the mountain is a productive region of corn, olives, grapes, and fruits, from three to eleven miles broad.
The eruptions of Aetna are frequent and imposing.
