

Thoughts Commence Now To Turn Toward Winter

Really now, in a continuing gift of pleasant weather, we have had a few rainfalls, over the hills of the morning. We come to an open door a moment to enjoy the miracle of the new day morning. So peaceful the scene is. So still, it seems that we are in a dream world, reaching out gentle fingers over woodland and field, brightening golden the far side of the valley, gliding in eastern winds, setting them about like jewels in the new day's sun. And as the sunlight reaches and spreads, And a title wind comes down from up the creek in a promise to farmers of harvesting ahead...

But there is a breakfast to make ready and serve. We come indoors to cut the loaf and arrange the slices of bread in an early and unreluctant morning. And James comes with first chorines pleased with the new day's carpenter, who does well in shaping the back verandah into a sunporch, comes from the back porch, and the far spare-room, and our day is on its way.

Thoughts commence to turn toward the winter. Items of summer clothing we tuck away. We take out the sweaters and jackets and warmer wear of cooler days. We cast on the required stitches of the old knitting needles, to make a new pair of winter socks for James, and an early and unreluctant morning. And James comes with first chorines pleased with the new day's carpenter, who does well in shaping the back verandah into a sunporch, comes from the back porch, and the far spare-room, and our day is on its way.

MARY HAWORTH

Jealous Girl Fumes Over Marital Status Of Sister

Dear Mary Haworth: My handied about Ours is an old proud family and I am urgently concerned. Please advise me. Dear A.G.: It seems your sister had ample justification for the first time, and was still in the air the second time. Our parents had both marriages annulled. But she just kept going the second time and they were not again. I was overjoyed with a distant relative recently recognized a cousin. I fill your thousands miles in her. When told that her second marriage had been annulled, she said, "Well, we'll do it all over again." So they drove to a neighborhood and she still has been checked and verified.

But I can find no record of the first two attempts. The papers were one in my parents' possession. I've seen them. But at their death, they were not to be found. Of this, Julie says: "You didn't really think they would be anything but unpleasant around, did you?" Most of those "in the know" are now deceased, and only one clergyman in a rest home who couldn't remember yesterday's headlines, says his records have been "misplaced."

Others conveniently just don't know what she talks about. Julie refuses to become excited. She says, "We did no wrong in the eyes of God. We can believe we were married or not, as they choose." She also says they insist on stirring up things, she won't want me. When I told her I would make arrangements to share the estate with her, she said, "Honey, you do as you please with my money. I was disowned, remember? Besides, we won't want it or need it."

The Lord knows they do need it. They have so little. She even wears the time when her children are in school. But they even read a pleasant enough life, as much as possible in these circumstances. You may wonder why I am so upset. Well, I am as upset as you've been married only a few months and already have children. They have records, social security records and the like. I don't want my sister's name

Canadian Furniture Buyers Swayed By J.S. Designers

MONTREAL (CP)—The Canadian buying public is fickle, tasteless and "gutless" when it comes to selecting furniture. This was the opinion expressed by some of the country's leading furniture designers here for the current annual furniture market trade show.

The designers, gathered in Montreal, agreed that something is wrong with Canadian home furnishing, but their reasons were varied. Hungarian-born designer Tom Sirny said there is a "great paradox" in North America. People here had a "fantastic possibility to live graciously" but failed to take advantage of it.

He said North Americans would spend $45 a week on groceries, while immigrants spend $80 a week on furniture. Gayer said that North American furniture manufacturers are "not doing a very good job" and that prices were kept down even though "designers in this country are the best in the world."
