Director's Meetings

On Friday night, the Board of the three County Federations met at O'Leary's, Charlottetown and Perth to plan the time, place, and program for the semi-annual County meetings to be held in the latter part of June or the first of July.

It is likely that the Provincial Marketing Board will call a meeting to coincide with the Prince County meeting for the purpose of electing a producer member to the Board.

Other matters in which members will be interested are election, artificial insemination, the insurance program, and an outline of the possibility of using the Dominion Co-operative Marketing Act for the potato crop.

The manager of the Potato Marketing Board will attend the County meetings and report on the Board's activities.

Provincial Marketing Board

The Provincial Marketing Board appointed by the Government is composed of three members, headed by W. R. Shaw, Chairman, H. McDonald, and J. L. Dewar.

The Board acts as a link between the Government and any marketing boards which may be established and in addition supervises in a general way, the policies which any producer board may put into effect.

In general, the Provincial Board has the responsibility of seeing that all producer boards operate within the limits of their own authority and the Marketing Act, and the Provincial Board also conducts and supervises the election by the producers of members on any Marketing Board which may be set up.

Are We Efficient?

Farmers are continually being impressed by other sections of the economy with the necessity of lowering the cost of production and with the importance of doing so to a large extent. Agriculture is handicapped in its endeavour to produce cheaply by high production costs in other industries which are able to utilize economies on these costs to comparatively defenceless farm production.

From the standpoint of increased production per worker, farmers need make no apologies to any industry. Advantage has been taken on every hand of mechanization and perhaps no other industry has modernized itself more rapidly than agriculture during the past decade.

Farmers are being told that we have lost our export markets due to inability to produce competitively with farmers in other countries, it should be pointed out that so long as a large section of the economy work forty hours per week at comparatively high wages, production costs on the farms will remain to a large extent in a straight jacket.

Large Or Small.

From time to time, Island farmers are told that some of our difficulties stem from the small

Ellen's Diary

The Lane at Alderica, too, "loved it." We suspect the strain of English in her make-up inclined her to be partial to the exquisite Old Country scenes, not the least being the charm of the smiling countryside and the stern beauty of her naturally fortified shores.

What a marvellous land is England — this "gem... set in a silver sea!"

Rob too, enjoyed the picture, as did Jamie who for some reason or another which may have something to do with shadowy memories of the war-years, would have liked it better without the accompanying "noise of bugles and bands."

Granddaughter found her appeal in the womanly interests — in sights of the Queen, her crowns and her robes; in her children so bright and winsome, but as the evening waned, she wearying of it all wondered, "just when will come the end?" Gage, to whom, as to the others, movies are "nothing new," followed the scenes with deep concentration, until... Was it a far-away lullaby of frog-chorus he heard? Or was it the smile of the Sandman he saw?

In that event, he snuggled down in his seat, leaned toward Rob and was all at once asleep.

"What will they remember of it?" Jeanie wondered, as we rode home through the star-strewn night. That we can only conjecture. Yet, whatever else of the picture may be lost through the years we think they will ever be able to remember the sweet, grave face of the young Queen as the crown of a vast Empire was being placed on her head.

Until tomorrow... Diary... Good-night....

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of my dear husband Lester H. Hooper who died June 19th, 1952.

I cannot forget your smiling face, Your happy carefree ways, The smile that won so many friends in those happy by-gone days.

Your gentle hands, they did their best, Your heart was true and tender, You patiently toiled for those you loved, And left them to remember.

God knew that you were suffering He knew you were in pain, He knew you never would get better, In this world again.

Inserted by Wife Blanche, and Son David.

WALNUT BUTTERMILK LOAF

Mix and sift twice, then sift into a bowl, 2 1/2 c. once-sifted pastry flour (or 2 1/4 c. once-sifted hard-wheat flour), 2 tps. Magic Baking Powder, 3/4 tsp. baking soda, 1 1/2 tps. salt, 3/4 tsp. ground mace. Mix in 3/4 c. lightly-packed brown sugar, 3/4 c. rolled oats and 1 c. broken walnuts. Combine 1 well-beaten egg, 1 c. buttermilk, 2 tps. grated orange rind, 1 tsp. vanilla and 5 tbs. shortening and melted. Make a well in dry ingredients and add liquids; mix lightly. Turn into a loaf pan (4 1/2" x 8 1/2") which has been greased and lined with greased paper. Bake in a rather slow oven, 325°, about 1 hour. Serve cold, thinly sliced and lightly buttered.

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

Recently I accompanied a young man who is to be married this summer, to the home he is building just outside the Capital, and which he wished to show me.

The little house, white gabled and garaged, set upon its foundations which had a short time ago was part of a cow pasture.

It was 2 p. m. We walked around it, admiring the pink curtains of the living room—so bridal, cozy, and inviting. (Some woman's deft hand was behind this bit of home-making but there was nothing to suggest it.)

Then my friend unlocked the door and we stepped inside and looked around. "Well, what do you think of it?" he said. "Like the set up?"

I told him that so far as I could judge it was quite a dream-house. I also told him that I hoped he would have no place or prospect behind those pink curtains.

"This," he said, "will be our future home," in a showing-off voice that comes so naturally to a young fellow with a new house on his hands and the prospects of a new bride. "The fireplace will be over there," he pointed with his hand, "and you'll walk out here into the sitting room, which is going to have one of those big modern windows. Over there—where you see those cans of paint—we'll have the dining room, and outside just off the sunporch will be a rock garden. Ought to be pretty nifty when it's all completed, eh?"

I thanked him for his flattery (under my breath, of course), and he looked about with the eye of a realist.

"We mean to decorate this room in blue and gold," he said. I followed him up to a ceiling of stucco like a dog following its master. He roamed about in the upper regions, visualizing his new home.

"In a few weeks," he told me, "we shall be moving in and starting life on our own."

I said, I hope your matrimonial journey may be a pleasant one. At the same time, I was thinking of all the little homes I've known where no special blessing rested on such places.

"What are you up to now?" I asked, as I saw my friend on all two's scratching in the lawless grass in front of the door we had just entered a few minutes before.

"Planting a horsehoe—for good luck, you know. But I must set it firmly in place or somebody may find it and throw it away."

I also put a dib of earth on the shoe and stepped on it hard with my foot.

"For the bride," I said. She'll probably need the luck more than you, Time will tell."

Then we locked the door and went out into the cold world. The new man have struggled ever since the human race began, and turned to look once to the little white cottage for it was now nearly 3 p. m. at least I turned around for I fancied I heard the voice of a baby crying somewhere behind those pink curtains; but I don't think Bill did.

For me that was a romantic adventure, just going with my friend to see the unborn home. I have followed every stage of the comedy and tragedy that has crept into some new homes and into the lives of the young married folk who occupied them. This is what I've learned: One day they will be running with the hare, the next day with the hounds, on his side one day, hers the next—but generally on hers. But vowed to stand

Recently in New York City, Customs agents seized $175,000 in smuggled gold. It was hidden in a special compartment welded to the underside of the rear fender of an auto.

Another smuggler, Eta Hoffman, a Belgian emigrant, was arrested at Idlewild Airport after arriving from Holland. Customs men found scores of diamonds in the hollowed-out portion of her platform shoes.

Hundreds of gimmicks are used in the attempt to smuggle goods into various countries which means that Customs officers must be given extensive training to keep up with the new tricks smugglers are forever introducing into their lucrative but illegal trade.

Too many of us try to copy others instead of striving to develop ourselves. This is a pity for after all it is said and done, nobody can successfully take on another's personality, nor be a Mr. Smith, when his name is Bob White.

Trying to copy others gives us an artificial something that is easily detected by our friends. In other words, assuming to be what we are not only makes us look ridiculous in the eyes of others.

So, I think it's a fine thing to get off the beaten path now and then, to be alone with one's thoughts.
