Cunard Liner

Britannic Docks

At Halifax

HALIFAX. (CP)—The Cunard liner Britannic docked here Friday, diverted from New York by the United States east coast stevedores strike.

Halifax dockers, although affiliated with the striking International Longshoremen's Association, handed the Britannic's lines as she docked and began removing baggage as soon as she tied up.

No cargo was unloaded. Cunard line officials said New York developments would determine whether it would be taken off here. Should a quick strike settlement appear likely the liner might continue to New York.

Eight hundred and sixty passengers debarked to board special boat trains for the United States.

HUNGRY HAWKS

CHAPLIN, Sask. (CP)—Large flocks of starlings are often seen feeding in a grain field, but not hawks. Bob Windrum, a highway bus driver, reported seeing 100 hawks feeding on swathed grain in a field between Moose Jaw and Regina.

CRICKETS

The name comes from the French—criquer, to creak: Crickets are short, dark, nocturnal insects, that belong to the same order (Orthoptera) as grasshoppers. There are said to be 2,000 named genera in their family, Gryllidae. Crickets vary in size from three-fifths to one inch in length. They have blunt heads with biting mouth parts. Their antennae are long and slender about half the length of their body. The hind legs are very broad and strong, and they have great powers of leaping. The field cricket, (Gryllus campestris), is nocturnal, that is, it usually is retiring during the day, and hides in its subterranean excavations. The cricket's fore legs are remarkably developed for both digging and cutting, as they are equipped with cutting edges like scissors, for cutting off small roots in making their burrows. Crickets are present everywhere in small numbers.

Crickets have wings, but they do not fly. They have been called "Nature's expert fiddlers". The male of the common field cricket (called by some Acheta assimilis Fab.) has a stridulating apparatus with which he chirps, by rubbing specialized parts of his front wings together. He uses a file on one fore wing to rasp it against a scraper on the other fore wing. When he wishes to deceive his enemies he becomes a ventriloquist, and with his wings lowered close to his back produces muffled, muted notes that appear to come from a much greater distance. When he wishes the sound to carry the farthest, his wings are raised up to form an angle of about 45° with his body.

The female has ear organs in the joints of her legs. Her ovipositor is from two-thirds to one inch in length. She deposits her eggs in a cavity made near the surface of the earth, where they are hatched by the heat of the sun. These are laid in Canada in August and early September, and hatched the following May and June. The nymphs pass through from eight to twelve nymphal instars or molts during the nine to fourteen weeks before they have fully developed wings as adults. The females prefer a damp soil, and lay a small number of banana-shaped eggs in each deposit with a total of about 500 eggs laid by each individual. The chirp of the adult cricket is about as familiar to the people in Canada from July until the autumn frost as the croak of frogs in spring. Crickets sometimes become abundant enough to cause serious damage to field and garden crops and to fruit trees. In the Great Plains area of the United States, crickets have destroyed fields of alfalfa kept for seed and all types of cereals, by cutting off the heads in the "dough" stage, and devouring them in their excavations. In the Gulf States, they have destroyed tomatoes, all types of cucurbits, peas, beans, strawberries and garden plants. When they get into the house in Canada, the United States and South America they frequently eat holes in clothes, paper and fur garments. Tree crickets have been known to spread canker disease where they punctured the bark with their ovipositor in laying eggs.

In Canada and the Northern States, crickets hibernate in the egg stage, and the older crickets usually die in winter. In California and the Gulf States, they winter as nymphs, and are active the year round. Under these conditions there are three generations a year. Crickets are kept as musical pets (called by some Acheta assimilis Fab.) has a stridulating apparatus with which he chirps, by rubbing specialized parts of his front wings together. He uses a file on one fore wing to rasp it against a scraper on the other fore wing. When he wishes to deceive his enemies he becomes a ventriloquist, and with his wings lowered close to his back produces muffled, muted notes that appear to come from a much greater distance. When he wishes the sound to carry the farthest, his wings are raised up to form an angle of about 45° with his body.

One investigator who frequently listened to nature's chorus, counted the chirping of the snowy tree cricket, and arranged the following formula to secure a reading of temperatures between 55° and 100° F. He added the figure 40 to the number of chirps the cricket made in fifteen seconds, to obtain the temperature of the air at the time. Crickets seldom chirp when the temperature is below 55° or above 100° F. During a series of experiments over a period of twelve years, another investigator determined that during a cricket's common song, it strikes 47% of the teeth on its wing file, producing about 4,900 cycles a second in vibration frequency. For its courtship song, the cricket raised its pitch to 17,000 cycles a second, and used 89% of the teeth on his wing file. He also determined that some crickets produce supersonic sounds beyond the reach of the human ear.

There is a chirping fish bait hatchery at Garden Park in Georgia, where they sell 100 cricket nymphs (from four to six weeks old) for $1.50. They are said to be excellent bait for bass, and that the hatchery sold over a million insects in 1952.

An editorial in the New York Times describes a cricket as: "A black ambulatory noise surrounded by a sentimental aura. On occasion it lives in the open field but its favourite habitat is behind a couch or under a bookcase, in a room where someone is trying to read. It has six legs, which make it an insect; two antennae, which makes it a creature of sensitive feeling; two wings that can be scraped together, which makes it a nuisance."

TIMELY NOTES ON TOPICS CONNECTED WITH Silver Fox And Mink Farming

On January 1, 1954, the firm of Joseph Ullmann Brokerage Corporation, 262 West 28th Street, New York 1, N.Y., will begin the observance of its centennial year. Joseph Ullmann, founder of the company, was born in France on March 29, 1826. At 26 years of age he decided to go to America and after a 16-day crossing of the Atlantic he arrived in New York. That same year, 1852, he went to New Orleans and opened up an auction for the sale of textiles. A serious yellow fever epidemic struck the city and he was forced to move north going first to Louisville, Kentucky, then to St. Louis in 1853. He was married that year and the following year moved to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he founded the firm of Joseph Ullmann, opening a general store handling groceries, etc. Soon after he began to handle pelts and hides brought to him by Indians and trappers, giving in exchange merchandise from his general store. The St. Paul business grew rapidly and even with the low prices of those days soon ran up to a turnover of $300,000 and more annually.

Hearing about Chicago as a good business city he opened there in 1866. Prior to this he had decided to deal exclusively in pelts, hides and wool and had discontinued the general store business. Realizing that the European market was of great importance Mr. Ullmann began making regular trips to Leipzig, London and Paris. He conducted a few auctions in London between 1868 and 1873 and held auctions in Leipzig in 1873. In 1875 he decided to devote his entire time to the Leipzig operations and moved to that city with his wife and eldest son Charles Ullmann, making this branch the main office of the firm. His other two sons, Samuel Ullmann, father of the present Joseph Ullmann, and Emanuel Ullmann, took over the management of the New York, Chicago and other branches.

Branches were also opened in Victoria, Edmonton, Newfoundland and in Shanghai, China. The present president of the corporation, Joseph Ullmann, started with the firm on March 1, 1900. He spent the first fourteen years in Europe with headquarters at Leipzig, Germany, and visited all the auctions in London and Paris and spent from six to eight weeks each year in Russia. The European branches were operated until the outbreak of World War I when the London, Paris and Leipzig branches were forced to curtail business and since that time they have been inactive.

It will be interesting to fox ranchers to learn that this great firm with its hundred years business history is celebrating its centennial. Joseph Ullmann, New York, was one of the first to recognize the beauty and the possibilities of Silver Fox when W. Chester S. McLure, representing the Fur Sales and Leasing Province, showed him a collection that he had taken to New York with him. From that visit and other connections Mr. McLure made, Silver Fox became the wanted fur for the fashionable people in the U.S.A. Prices of over $1000 were realized for quite a number of pelts and the average was very high. These prices and the beauty of the fur brought attention to it throughout the length and breadth of the United States and in a remarkably short time Americans decided to go into the breeding and raising of silver foxes. By 1920 quite a number of fox farms were producing in a small way and within the next ten years they had multiplied tremendously, particularly in states such as Michigan and Wisconsin. Our congratulations, which we are sure will be shared in by many, are extended to Joseph Ullmann and our wishes for a long and continued success in their business operations.

Arthur Schwartz of Hedricka Furs Inc., New York, confirmed the rumour that he had purchased one of the major fox farms in Norway during his recent trip to Oslo. He said he had whole-hearted confidence in the fashion future of the mutation Norwegian Blue Fox, emphasizing the importance of top quality pelts and top knowledge styling in the production of mutation blue fox garments. He commented: "The mutation Blue Fox has the greatest future of any new fur on the horizon. When styled well and made of top quality skins small Blue Fox pieces have potential to take their place alongside mink as a must item in a fashion wise woman's wardrobe."

Mr. Schwartz said he will use the entire output of the Norwegian ranch, which he characterized as the finest in color, quality and character he has ever seen. He described the skins as a new mutation and not the old Greenland or Arctic Blue Foxes and added that they have unequalled silkiness.
