It cures all diseases caused by thin blood and exhausted nerves and makes pale, weak nervous men, women and children strong and healthy.

When out of breath you can catch it quicker by standing still than by running after it.

CHINESE SITUATION.

DESCRIBED IN OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A parliamentary paper on China was recently issued dealing with the period of the murder of the missionary Brooks, January 4, to July 13, when the Chinese minister at London, Sir Chih Chen Lo Feng Luh, communicated to Lord Salisbury the imperial edict. The Penultimate written communication from the British minister at Peking, Sir Claude Macdonald, dated May 21, declares that the demeanor of the inhabitants of Peking is quiet and civil towards foreigners, although from the panic among native Christians it may be assumed the latter are being subjected to threats of violence.

Sir Claude Macdonald was convinced that a few days of heavy rain fall to terminate the drought which had helped excite the unrest of the country districts would do more to restore tranquility than any measure the Chinese or foreign government could take.

The last letter from Sir Claude Macdonald, dated May 28, refers to the warning to Prince Ching that the ministers will summon guards unless the government shows a greater disposition to protect the legations. Minister Macdonald admitted that he was somewhat surprised at the calmness with which Prince Ching received the suggestion which he said had already been made to him. Minister Macdonald adds: "Possibly the government has awakened to the strength of the Boxer movement, and would be disposed to welcome the additional security afforded by the presence of foreign troops. The contents of Sir Claude Macdonald's subsequent telegrams are already known. July 7th Lord Salisbury notified the viceroys, through a communication through a Chinese minister, they would be held personally guilty should any injury be done to Europeans." On July 6 Lord Salisbury gave the southern viceroys assurances of support.

FROM THE EMPEROR.

July 11th the Chinese legation forwarded to the Queen a telegram despatched from Peking July 3rd, by the Emperor's as follows:

"Since the opening of commercial intercourse between foreign nations and China the aspirations of Great Britain have always been after commercial extension, not territorial aggrandizement. Recently dissensions have arisen between Christians and the people of Chu Li and Shan Tung, certain evil-disposed persons have availed themselves of the occasion to make disturbances, and these having extended so rapidly, the treaty powers, suspecting the rioters might have been encouraged by the imperial government, attached and captured the Taku forts. The sufferings arising from this act of hostility have been great, and the situation is much involved. In consideration of the facts that of the foreign commerce of China more than seventy per cent. belongs to England, that the Chinese tariff is lower than that of any other country, and the restrictions there are fewer, British merchants have, during the decades, maintained relations with Chinese merchants at treaty ports as harmonious as if both were members of the same family. But now complications have arisen, mutual distrust has been engendered, and the situation having thus changed for the worse, it is felt that if China cannot be supported in maintaining her position foreign nations looking on so large a country, so rich in natural resources, might be tempted to exploit or despoil it, and perhaps differ among themselves with respect to their conflicting interests. It is evident this will create a state of matters that would not be advantageous to Great Britain, a country which views commerce as her greatest interest. China is now engaged in raising men and means to cope with these eventualities, but she feels that if left to herself she might not be equal to the occasion should it ever arrive, and therefore turns to England in the hope of procuring her good offices in bringing about a settlement of the difficulties that have arisen with the other treaty powers.

"The emperor makes this frank exposure of what is nearest his heart and hopes this appeal to her majesty the Queen Empress may be graciously taken under consideration and an answer vouchsafed at the earliest possible moment." The papers close with the edict of June 29, already published, which was communicated to the foreign office. June 13th.

NEGOTIATIONS. The parliamentary paper on China shows that considerable negotiations had provisionally passed between Great Britain and the other European powers regarding the policy of Japanese action, while Lord Salisbury notified Ambassador Pauncefote on July 22nd as follows:

"You should suggest to Secretary of State Hay that any troops which it is possible to send from Manila would be of great value, as it is possible that the United States legation is in great danger as well as the legations of the other powers."

Germany assumed the position regarding the Japanese matter that nothing must be done to imperil the accord of the powers. Japan insisted upon an assurance that her intervention would not lead to collision with Russia.

Russia finally declared on June 28 that she had no desire to hinder Japan's liberty, especially after her expressed intention to conform her action to that of other powers. The correspondence shows that Count Muravieff, the late Russian minister of foreign affairs, took an optimistic view of the situation in China, but that Count Lamsdorf, his successor, was far from sharing in this sanguine view. He thought that Northern China was in a state of hopeless anarchy, as did M. Delcasse, the French minister of foreign affairs, who, on June 5th, considered the imminent danger over, but who afterwards, on July 4th, proposed a collective note, warning the de facto government at Peking, hoping that this would demonstrate the solidarity of the accord of the powers. M. Delcasse insisted that the relief of the legations at Peking was far more important than any petty grievances among the powers. On June 23rd Lord Pauncefote informed Lord Salisbury that in addition to the regiment already ordered from Manila to Tien Tsin three hundred marines were going, though at that date the United States did not think a state of war necessarily existed in China.

Mania for Operations

Among the Doctors. No Need of the Knife to Cure Piles. A Surer, Cheaper Easier Way, Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Dread of the surgeon's knife causes multitudes of people to suffer on year after year with piles, when they could be cured without risk, expense, or danger of an operation by using Dr. Chase's Ointment, the only preparation guaranteed to cure any case of itching, bleeding, or protruding piles. Rev. J. A. Baldwin, Baptist minister, Arkona, Ont., writes:—"For over twenty years I was a great sufferer from itching and protruding piles. I used many remedies and underwent three very painful surgical operations, all without obtaining any permanent benefit. When about to give up in despair I was told to use Dr. Chase's Ointment, and did so, finding relief at once. I used three boxes, and am almost entirely cured. The itching is all gone. I have advised others to use it, believing it would cure them as it has me." Dr. Chase's Ointment is the only positive and actual cure for every form of piles, 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates and Co., Toronto.
