It's easier to iron trimmings of rickrack braid if you reverse the garment with the rickrack trim and iron it on the wrong side. In this way, the tip of the iron can not catch points of braid.

ELLEN'S DIARY

From Gran' Daddy Down A Good Time Had By All

The herd sire of this farm and that at Rob's, both of whom had been absent at the Fair during its gala week, returned to homesteads in the wee small hours of this morning. . . . The stars shone and moved nearer to the daybreak, and the clean raiment of the new August day gently brushed the morning hills.

Ours, as we may say of both animals, had a pleasant twinkle in his eye and we believe he wore a bright ribbon or two at his ear. Nevertheless, he gave a long pleased sigh of relief as he stepped down from the truck and entered his familiar barn-stall.

"Well, I'm glad that's over, Ellen," he nodded. "I'm not too crazy about any of that parading before a judge that a fellow has to do at a Fair—I just do it as a favor to the farm. And it's a true saying that 'East west, home's best.' You sort of get used to home. And after all there's no bed like one's own, none so restful and sweet."

"Not that it wasn't . . . well you know" he nodded again "in there. But between ourselves the continual confusion of sounds is to say the least most disconcerting. If I hadn't my dreams, Ellen, I couldn't have endured it at all. But," he smiled, "when I closed my eyes, I could see my own stall and feel the breeze-of-home wandering in, sweet with the scents of the Summer. And see the golden notes of the sunbeams dancing along them up and down to the ceiling. And in the quiet, know that the swallows were high up along the rafters and the kittens dozing in a furry heap about the open door."

"This," he said setting himself in content in his rustling straw-bed "is good! I'm neither hungry nor thirsty—Jamie saw to that. He's a mighty good hand with stock. I guess, poor lad he's weary of it all. Glad it's over—because of his irregular meals and his sleeping close by us. But he wanted to, didn't he? Yes, then I reckon from Gran'daddy down" his grin changed into a sleepy yawn "a good time was had by all!"

"Yes," we laughed softly into the moonlight. "a good time was had by all."

HAPPENINGS

A gala event took place on Thursday evening of the summer home of the Clubs, Kephoch, when members and guests of the Charlotteville Business and Professional Women's Club gathered for a chicken barbecue. This was a special unscheduled summer event for the club to honour Mrs. Joyce Sherren, Chairman of the Eastern Division of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Felxstowe, England.

Later in the evening, Mrs. Sherren, in a delightful way, told of the activities of the Clubs in England and gave a description of Felxstowe, a town about the size of Charlotteville. She told of the part played by this Women's organization in business and public fields and stressed particularly the need for more women in Councils. She herself is a member of the Council in her home town.

One of the projects of her Division, which Mrs. Sherren is very proud, is that of bringing displaced children from the Continent to England for a short stay each summer, and although there is always sadness when the time comes for the children to return she felt that it was a most worthwhile undertaking.

To quote Robertson Davies it was a "superbly poetic." "Twelfth Night. "Hit Parade, 1794" is the caption for an article in the Christian Science Monitor by Horace Reynolds. Interest in the early musical life of the United States is the theme. Mr. Reynolds mentions a facsimile reprint of Benjamin Carr's "Federal Overture" Published by Carr in Philadelphia in 1794. Here is where the Prince Edward Island tie-up comes in.

To quote Mr. Reynolds: "First there is Benjamin Carr himself, who is typical of the young English, German, and Austrian musicians who came here after the American Revolution to grow up with the country. Usually they tried first one place, then another, until they found their niches. Gottlieb Graupner, who was to Boston's early music what James Hewitt was to New York's, for instance went first to Prince Edward Island and then to Charleston, South Carolina, before he split the distance between them and settled in Boston to become the father of that city's orchestral music."

Dr. Jackson, an English-trained organist, of Johnsonian size and temperament, Iria Alexandria, Virginia; Baltimore, Philadelphia Elizabeth, New Jersey, and New York, before he too settled in Boston.
