Yesterday's storm, the worst experienced at this season for many years, disrupted telephone and electric light connections and flooded out several families resident in the low-lying parts of the City. It caused similar disturbance throughout the Province, washing out a culvert at Milton and further delaying the Borden train which had been retarded due to remain in their docks at Tormentine and Borden for more than an hour yesterday morning.

Prince Edward Island farmers are greatly alarmed with the failure of railway workers and management to settle their differences and are critical of the uncompromising attitude of both parties, according to a statement from the Island Federation last evening. "Island farmers," the statement says, "are seriously concerned about the outcome of the dispute. They are acutely conscious of the fact that higher railway costs invariably affect agriculture, both as a decrease in returns for products sold and increased costs for feeds, machinery and other goods purchased."

There was a general exodus of tourists here over the weekend and on Monday. Many feared to delay their departure longer due to the threatened railway strike. Many resorts and cabins were all but emptied as guests sought to beat the strike deadline. They hope to make sufficient lighting facilities available to make night crossings possible.
