THE BIBLE
(The London-Times)

In the early days of Biblical criticism Campbell of Bow wrote that while it was a searching trial of faith "it may yet develop into an aid to faith." The prophecy has been justified: the once dreaded criticism is now the best weapon of the instructed Christian against attacks upon the Bible, yielding fruitful explanations of the difficulties which careful reading of it inevitably raises and which used to be evaded rather than answered.

Criticism is but judging and without judgment there cannot be worthy understanding or appreciation. Moreover, in applying it to the Bible the judge finds himself judged.

The Biblical books are greatly various in form and content; much appears to have little or no relevance to religious life as understood by modern thoughtful men. Closer study shows that any isolation of its component parts diminishes one of its great values, which is the demonstration that religion emerges in and through the ordinary experiences of human life; there is an outline narrative of a particular community through the many stages of its growth.

Precisely at the point where continuity appears to be most plainly broken—the division of the Testaments—the unity is most explicitly asserted. There is a "new creation," but it is the true Israel. It is variously emphasized of Jesus the Christ that "how many soever the promises of God, in him is the 'yea'"; and when his missionary apostle is a prisoner, it is "for the hope of Israel." The books were collected and haphazard down by the one continuing society as its sacred scriptures and as the record of the course of its life.

No one nowadays need deprecate the insights preserved in the sacred literature of other religions in order to recognize the Bible as the crown of religious writings. There is also the testimony of multitudes to its unique value. "All types of men, of every degree of intelligence, at every stage of culture, in every condition of life, and when other comforts have failed, have found in these scriptures the divine word for their need.

Again, history shows the close connexion between ignorance of the Bible and corruption of the Church, and that the best guarantee of a true scale of values in the Christian religion is constant reference to its own source.

Nor has the Bible a competitor as a book of instruction in the art of right living, combining the loftiest teaching with abundant illustrations thereof which fix it in the mind, and containing not a little which is within the understanding of an intelligent child, yet also so profound that the studies of 19 centuries have not exhausted its significance.

The full Christian Bible contains an element with no true counter-part in the Old Testament. In importance, and moral quality, the Gospels are unique. Of the life and teaching they epitomize, the rest of the New Testament is the result and presents the interpretation.

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

Our farmers came to the grading of seed potatoes tonight, having been delayed until then by the number and succession of duties that quite filled the daylight hours. Most insistent these duties appear to be, and considering them we wondered if James is finding any leisure at all to devote to brushing the fattening cattle as has been his custom about this time of year. Perhaps between loadings in some cleaning project on an afternoon when the sun promised greening meadows, or maybe after last choring had been done in the silence of night, then suddenly we would realize that James was missing.

To reappear at length with the tell-tale marks of the grooming still clinging to overalls and jacket sleeve—the left one is the hand that bears the brunt of such work. Coming to the kitchen-sink in a silence one knew was full. It would break presently in a comment like: "I'm thinking, Ellen, that this is going to be a long-drawn-out Spring." Or "it keeps cold for this day of the year. And would you believe it? The last mow, we still have the stacks to come and go on, but that mow is down to the beam, and you may say we've just started to feed from there! There's no telling just when the stock will reach the grass."

Then in a grave voice "I was telling them that this morning, though it's not much good to say anything—they're likely to go out and buy more cattle! They don't know what it means to be scarce of feed—if they did I'm thinking they'd be more canny. A nipping time wouldn't hurt them. It would teach them to match better their stores and their stock. They never saw a last forkful of hay or straw on a lot, or a last peck of grain in the granary. And even if we do get through one year, what about the next? Yes, I'm thinking a nipping wouldn't hurt them at all!"

From the cellar at present, we hear the sound of the grader as it turns in a rumbling monotony that is regular and effective. It is punctuated by spells of conversation and some chuckling which is a usual mark of their working together. It is a nice time in our living to find this comradeship between father and sons which shows no signs of lessening but instead seems to grow stronger and more mellow and tolerant through the years. It has been an ideal partnership, and should the farms yield nothing better than average returns to their owners, they have given to all content and peace of mind in our way of life. Mr. C. from the house on the hill, helper by choice, is an alert and interested assistant and he was among the crew that earlier in the day loaded a great truck with seed at Alderlea, and by virtue of this fair day and an open road saw it enter the trail which leads out and over the hill towards the corner-store.

We found a new sprightliness in the pot of shamrock that is among Carolyn's store of cherished plants on this St. Patrick's Day of sunny and gentle breeze. "An' have ye ever noticed the makin' of the leaves?" we recalled Pat's words

Marriage For Security

Loveless Match Can Succeed —For Unsentimental Woman

DEAR MISS DIX: If you were 29, lonely, and tired of making the sacrifices necessary to continue a successful business career, would you marry a splendid man eighteen years your senior if he adored you and could give you every luxury? Is the difference in age too great an obstacle?

MARIANNE

ANSWER: The difference in age is not an insuperable obstacle to the match because a business woman of 29 is mature in thought and feeling, she has had experience of the world and is, in reality, as old as a man in the forties.

Whether it is advisable for a woman to make a marriage of convenience or not depends upon the woman herself. If she is of a romantic temperament, it is a hazardous experiment, because if she is not in love with the man before marriage she will not fall in love with him afterward, and after she has got fed up on the luxuries that he can give her she will begin to regret her bargain.

LIKING GOOD AS LOVING

On the other hand, there are women who are, one might say, more head and back than heart, and who can be perfectly satisfied with material things. Liking is as good as loving to them.

Personally, I belong among the sentimentalists, and I think that nothing on earth justifies marriage or pays for it except love. Especially for women. And marriage is bound to mean sacrifice to a woman, and whether this is a joy and a delight to her or a cross depends upon how much she loves her husband. It is so sweet to give up one's own pleasure, one's desires, one's tastes if it makes some one happy who is dearer to one than one is to oneself, and so bitter to have to do it for one to whom one is indifferent.

Many women who are tired of working and supporting themselves are tempted to marry men for whom they do not care just to get a meal ticket. But they soon find out that marriage is no security, either; that husbands are as hard to get along with as bosses, and that a wife can no more loaf on her job than an employee. And they discover that domesticity can be just as dull as an office.

So consider well before you marry for a home and a shopping ticket, and if you do make the bargain, play fair. Give the man the worth of his money by being a good wife to him.

DEAR MISS DIX: What can I do to break up a love affair between my 17-year-old high-school girl and a 19-year-old boy who is also still in school? He is a good boy morally, comes from a nice family, but is the spoiled son of indulgent parents. He has a vague idea of marriage some day, but apparently not a prospect in the world. I thought it just calf love with them, but the attachment is growing too deep and I sense the danger of a girl's best years being

That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

TONSILS AND ADENOIDS GROW BACK BECAUSE OF ALLERGY

One of the conditions found in examination of the throat is tonsils which "grew back" after operation.

For years physicians thought that the "growing back" of tonsils and adenoids was because these growths were not completely removed the first time, that the surgeon had just used the old method of the snare knife, which went over the tonsil and did not remove the lower part or base. That these surgeons did not recognize that another condition present besides the tonsils and adenoids really the cause of their "growing back" is now known.

In "Annals of Allergy," Dr. N. W. Clein states that twenty years ago he began the investigation to discover whether tonsils and adenoids "grew back" because of faulty surgery or some unknown factor. Children whose tonsils and adenoids "grew back" after surgical removal were found to be those who were allergic and had not had their allergy treated because their allergy was not recognized by their physician and the operating surgeon.

When the allergic symptoms are properly treated in children who require removal of tonsils and adenoids the percentage of re-growth of tonsils and adenoid (lymphoid) tissue is almost nothing, about 3 per cent compared to 27 per cent where the allergic condition has not been recognized and therefore not treated.

Dr. Clein states that all children should be tested for allergy and the allergy treated before tonsils and adenoids are removed.

"Symptoms of allergic disease—head colds, skin rashes, hives, stomach upsets—are not usually relieved by removal of tonsils and adenoids." Early recognition and the special or specific treatment are the most effective measures for symptoms due to allergic disease which are usually caused by foods, furs, feathers, pollen of plants and sometimes by emotional disturbances and nervousness.

It is only fair to say that allergy was almost unknown as a definite condition or disease of the body until recent years.

A SUDDEN move in the face of obstacles, limitations, impediments and frustrations may eventually be justified by end results. The climax may amend difficult conditions or situations, and bring about better work, more interesting environs and contacts rebuilding hope and courage. While there is an element of change in undertaking such change in the face of obstructions, it may be wiser to inaugurate readjustments rather than endure hopeless stagnation.

For the Birthday

Those whose birthday it is are encouraged to make a move in the direction of bettering conditions, in the matter of health, environs, job or other crystallized or static conditions. And while the move has hazards, in the long run with definite patience, perseverance and sound judgment, there may be a betterment of affairs, with surprising and happy denouements. Stubborn obstacles or difficulties could yield to a bright idea or perhaps radical or strange tactics. Dare to take a chance.

A child born on this day, while original, daring and fond of change at the same time has sound qualities for far-reaching and permanent success in life.

Paperhanging

When doing your own wall papering, it is a good idea to lay the rolls of paper on the basement floor for a few days before using. Moisture will be absorbed by the paper and make it less brittle and easier to handle.

Mashed Potatoes

Before adding the milk to mashed potatoes, it should always be heated. This is even more important to remember during the winter months, because then the milk is so cold and the potatoes are chilled by it, therefore becoming heavy in texture.

Paint Stains

Paint stains on clothing can often be removed simply by rubbing the stain with the wrong side of the same material.

Morning Smile

Safety First

Two strangers stood at a bar. One was doing most of the talking. "Yes," he said, "I arrived home one morning after midnight, and as I opened the door I saw a stranger kissing my wife. I closed the door softly and hurried out again. At 1 a. m. I returned. I opened the door softly—and there was the stranger still kissing my wife. So I went out again. At 1.15 . . ."

"Just a minute," interrupted the other man. "Why did you keep going back into the street? Why didn't you walk straight into the room?"

The talkative man frowned. "What?" he cried. "And have my wife catch me coming home at this hour?"

BIG PLANE DAMAGED

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, March 20 — (AP) — An explosion ripped out a wing fuel cell of the XC-99, world's largest military land airplane, and injured eight workers at Kelly Air Force base today. Precautions taken against fire hazards held damage to a minimum. The left inboard gas tank exploded as workmen were spraying carbon dioxide gas into the 4,000-gallon fuel cell to clear it of gasoline fumes, officials reported.
