Spokane Anti-Smoking Project Pushed For Past Three Years

By KEN JACKSON

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP)—The United States surgeon-general's report singling out smoking as a major health hazard caused no surprise in Spokane public schools. Teachers here have been pushing a full-scale anti-smoking campaign among students for three years.

Many of the studies and statistics referred to in the surgeon - general's report had already been used here in what is thought to be the first comprehensive, district - wide program against student smoking, a campaign that includes elementary grades and continues through high school.

The pilot project has attracted wide attention, bringing requests for information from most states and even from abroad. It is rated a success by its sponsors in holding down the amount of school-age smoking.

"The essence of the surgeon-general's report is included in the source material used for our program," said Dr. George I. Werner, chairman of health instruction on smoking in the Spokane school district.

"By the continuing use of anti - smoking material, presented as graphically as possible with planned follow-up in classroom and home, I'm certain we have stopped many children from ever lighting up."

The co-operation of teachers is gained by convincing them the smoking unit in health education is really a matter of life and death. They are told in a teaching guide that "according to American Cancer Society figures, about 1,000 boys and girls now in Spokane schools will die of lung cancer." It suggests that if children can be persuaded to even postpone smoking, some can be saved from cancer and perhaps heart ailments.

Teachers are urged to be as objective and unemotional as possible in their approach—they are told not to make a moral issue of smoking.

"The task the teacher faces is to present the facts regarding smoking so well the student will wish to defer any decision to begin smoking until he or she is old enough to make this important and often irrevocable decision," Werner says.

The authoritarian "you shall not" approach is avoided.

"The most effective method is to give children honest, factual information, including facts on the effect of smoking on the person now and in later life, and then leave the decision as to whether to smoke to the student."

Under district regulations, teachers may not smoke in the presence of students.

Films, graphs and posters are widely used in the campaign. One color movie on a lung cancer operation is so graphic that students become faint while it is being shown.

The cost of smoking is discussed, with the illustration that a pack-a-day smoker ends the year with only a wheelbarrow full of butts. But students are reminded that it is certainly proper for a manufacturer to expect a profit on his product.

Advertising claims also are discussed. Students are reminded of the important place that advertising plays in the North American way of life, but they are urged to make intelligent evaluation before accepting or rejecting.

Werner would like to expand the local project to include help for the student who wants to break the habit.

He would also like surveys to provide figures on the effectiveness of the campaign.

At present he must rely on the testimony of principals who report that while up to 100 students once stood across the street from schools to smoke, now only a handful do.

Winter Building Makes Jobs Easier To Find In Winnipeg

WINNIPEG (CP)—Winters in this Prairie city are among the coldest of any major population centre in North America but construction is going ahead full stride.

Why?

"In an area where the odds appear to be against you, you make full use of what facilities are available," says Jim Fox, manager of the Winnipeg branch of the National Employment Service.

As a result, the ranks of winter jobless are dwindling.

MAKE PROGRESS

"Great strides have been made in conquering the yearly start of seasonal unemployment," says Mr. Fox, "and I think the progress will continue."

In January, 22,460 persons applied to NES for jobs of all kinds compared wjth 28,784 for the same month last year. Some 3,782 were placed in jobs, an increase of 382.

Part of the reason, officials say, is that emphasis on education and job - retraining programs has led more persons to permanent employment rather than the casual labor market.

But builders are putting more emphasis on winter construction, helped in part by the new $500 federal bonus to owners of winter-built homes.

TOPS IN CANADA

There is more winter work in metropolitan Winnipeg than anywhere in Canada, says Mr. Fox, but winter construction is on the upswing across the country.

W. G. Malcolm, president of Malcolm Construction here, prepared a report for the Canadian Construction Association which held there were financial advantages to winter building.

He said a survey involving projects costing from $20,000 to $2,000,000 across Canada "more than confirmed the contentions of the association that winter construction is both feasible and economical."

CCA President Thomas A. Somerville said in a speech last fall it is an "outmoded bogey" that winter-built structures are necessarily inferior in quality and excessive in costs.

"Perhaps the highest relative volume of wintertime building is carried out in centres like Winnipeg and Montreal where the severity of the winter climate is such that special efforts have been made over the years to beat the problem."

U.S. Labor Leader Supports Threatened Wheat Boycott

By NEIL GILBRIDE

MIAMI BEACH (AP)—Labor leader George Meany has strongly endorsed a threatened longshoremen's boycott of U.S. wheat shipments to Russia, but promised to help President Johnson try to resolve the dispute.

Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, said he would "approve any measure" including a boycott to ensure that at least 50 per cent of the wheat is shipped on U.S. vessels.

But he added that President Johnson personally asked his co-operation "and I agreed to try to find a settlement."

Meany, at a press conference after the opening of the AFL-CIO's annual executive council meeting, said Johnson called him Sunday.

Meany blamed the wheat blowup on the U.S. administration's failure to live up to previous promises to ship half the grain on American vessels.

'CHEAPER POLICY'

"The grain interests prefer not to ship any of the wheat in American ships because it is cheaper to ship in foreign ships," Meany said.

The wheat dispute was the first order of business taken up by the executive council, the policy-making body of the 13,500,000 - member labor federation.

Opening lead—queen of diamonds.

Every card played tells a story, and it is the ability to read meaning into the cards played which distinguishes the expert from the average player.

Take a hand like this one, where South is declarer at six hearts. He has only one problem to solve, and that is the question of which way to take the spade finesse. If he decides that East has the queen, he should finesse the ten.

Two- way finesses occur frequently, and learning to guess them correctly is an art worth cultivating. No one is expected to guess them right all the time but any halfway decent declarer will guess right a high percentage of the time.

South takes the diamond lead with the ace and draws three rounds of trumps, learning in the process that West started with three hearts. In order to learn more about the distribution of the other suits, so that he will know later what to do about the spade finesse, he next cashes three rounds of clubs. As it happens, West shows out on the third club, so South discovers that West started with exactly two clubs.

Declarer now plays a diamond in an effort to learn how that suit is divided. East wins with the king and continues with the ten, which South ruffs. Since West does not follow to the diamond, South now has a complete reading of the distribution. The question of which way to finesse the spade is solved beyond a shadow of a doubt.

West started originally with precisely three hearts, two diamonds and two clubs, which proves that he started with exactly six spades. This, in turn, means that East was dealt only one spade.

So South cashes the king of spades, forcing East to play his only spade, and then leads another spade and finesses in the absolute assurance that the finesse will win.
