MARY HAWORTH

Comment Challenged By Mental Hospital Worker

Dear Mary Haworth: As a staff member with the Foster Care of Family Home Unit of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, the federal government's mental hospital in the District of Columbia, I challenge a recent comment of yours.

You were responding to a correspondent who, after applauding the work of the Menninger Clinic in Topeka, Kansas, suggested that it offers a wonderful example for other communities to follow, in helping to heal the mentally sick.

That is to say, with respect to "ordinary families of Topeka acting as adoptive families for recovered patients of the Menninger Clinic... between the period of total hospitalization and the time when (the patients) may return to their own home backgrounds."

You took the position that such foster - home programs probably wouldn't be feasible in either the mid - town residential sections or the suburbs of most eat cities. You argued that "a strong sense of fraternity" in a close - knit community (as Gheel in Belgium of Topeka in Kansas) probably is essential for "Bringing together successfully ... foster families, hospital advisory personnel and recuperative patients."

Unfortunately, ultra - conservative views such as yours tend to keep this kind of progress from getting under way. Let's not assume something can't be done only because it's not being done.

As a matter of fact, in the great metropolitan complex of Washington, D.C., a program of family foster care for recuperative mental patients has been operating successfully and growing for a number of years.

Foster - home participants represent every religion, race, socio - economic and educational level. They live in the suburbs, in old and crowded mid-town sections, in apartment buildings and in renovated mansions.

Some care for one patient, others care for 20. Some are old settlers, others are newcomers. Some are hearthbound housewives. Others are widows or retired couples. Still others, though in active growing households, are ready to serve the needy.

Financial returns are small, but the opportunity to help and the rewards of seeing the patient improve are more than worth the effort invested.

I dispute your theory that such work can thrive only in a rooted community. I think rather, to use sociological reasoning, that a mental patient in the somewhat impersonal invironment of a large city would feel less "marked" than in a small close - knit neighborhood where everyone knows everyone.

In every community there are persons ready to help others, if only they knew how, or where to begin. We have no Menninger brothers at St. Elizabeth's only the professional staff and a corps of splendid volunteers who publicize our program, train our foster - home sponsors and supervise our placements....

I hope you will publish this letter; perhaps it will stimulate other communities into action. Thank you. M.C. — Social Work Asssistant

Dear M.C.: If publishing your letter will be positively helpful in promoting the progress of reliable mental health care, this column is only to happy to oblige.

I shudder to think, however, of the harm that could be done by amateurs rushing in where angels might fear to tread, in the matter of affording foster home care (for a variety of personal reasons) to mental patients hovering vulnerably on the borderline between recovery and relapse.

It would seem indeed that the wisdom of Solomon, or, as a modern American substitute, the seasoned analytic insight of Menninger trainers, say, would be required to decide who is qualified in essential ways, and who is not, to provide a safe - and - sound "home away from home" for hopeful mental convalescents. M.H.

Display Crafts At Belle River

The women of Belle River and surrounding districts spent an industrious and enjoyable two weeks when the Sewing and Handicraft Van visited at Belle River. The instructresses were Dori LeClair and Claire Buote from the Women's Institute Branch at Charlottetown. On Achievement Day, Theresa MacLeod, director of Women's Services for P.E.I. was present to view the display. Miss MacLeod was welcomed by Mrs. Ernest Morrison. The finished articles were displayed and dresses, skirts, and blouses were modelled. The display included billfolds, satin and gingham cushions, curtains, baskets, gloves, textile painted, and liquid embroidered articles.

Miss MacLeod commended the ladies on the good work achieved and encouraged them to continue. She also explained how this course could help to develop interest at the regular monthly Women's Institute Meetings.

A vote of thanks was extended to Miss LeClair and Miss Buote by Christene Nicholson, after which gifts were presented by Linda Bell and Betty Morrison.

Refreshments were served and a social hour enjoyed.

GEMS UNGUARDED

LONDON (AP)—A guards officer making his pre - dawn round of the Tower of London discovered that the main gate was unguarded. Within the tower were Britain's priceless crown jewels, viewed every year by more than 350,000 persons from all over the world. The sentry, Sgt. Brian Davies, 23, was found curled up on a bed. A court-martial Wednesday reduced him to a private.

Red Cross Ships Clothing For Hong Kong Children

The first of the 1965 shipments of children's clothing made up by hundreds of women throughout the province through the Red Cross women's work committee is going forward by C. N. Freight today to Montreal. This shipment is consigned to the British Red Cross Society at Hong Kong and will sail on the S.S. Thomas Maersk which will be loading at Montreal on May 7th.

The ten cartons in this shipment contain a total of 2,200 articles among which are 1560 items of baby clothing which make up the 75 layettes. 30 of these layettes (the first of this type to be made in P.E.I.) are suitable for use in tropical climates, and 45 are for use in northern climates and both types of weather are included in the area served by the British Red Cross Society in Hong Kong. The other five cartons contain 420 pullovers for both girls and boys, and 220 nightgowns.

Mrs. F. W. Hyndman, chairman of the Red Cross women's work committee for this province said yesterday that according to the annual report of the national women's work department which has just been received, 110 cases of clothing with a commercial value of $54,566 were sent from Canada to Hong Kong in 1964. The report further states, "This is always an area of highest priority because the need is so great and never - ending."

A letter received by the Canadian Red Cross from its counter-part in Hong Kong acknowledging receipt of last year's shipments speaks for itself of the gratitude with which this clothing is received: -

"The work in the cases received is tremendous. I think, too, the amount of work done, not to mention the thoughtfulness you put into these consignments is marvellous. The articles were used up immediately, replacing our disaster stock after the last typhoon. Please convey our sincere thanks for all the hard work and kindness in assembling your many shipments. Actually we have a typhoon approaching at the moment so it may well be that your clothing will be worn by some poor homeless victims tomorrow."

During 1964, Canadian Red Cross women's work supplies went to 16 countries throughout the world, 15 of these were located either in the Far East or south of the Mediterranean Sea, whereas a few years ago, the major part was sent to Europe.

These supplies meet the disaster needs not only overseas but also at home.

Materials for these garments, which are made up by hundreds of women who belong to a variety of organizations throughout the province, are purchased with Red Cross funds a portion of which are raised by the United Fund with which Red Cross is a partner.

ELLEN'S DIARY

The Piglets Were Napping Cuddled Beside Mother

"My mittens — I can't find them!" Peter complained this morning. "Oh" he smiled at a thought, "I know what I can do! I'll just slip my hands in my pockets."

"But you can't do that. We're going to drive in to the other place" Alex explained, "and you will need them."

"Then wait for me" Peter called, already on his way to pick up another pair at the house across the lane.

He, poor lad, has a difficult time trying to keep up with the doings of his older brothers. But bright and quick, he manages admirably. Now they were going by horse and sleigh with their father by way of the fields which lie between, to feed and tend the stock at the far barns. This would take them past the scene of the wood - cutting and extend to include a call to Jamie's home, to see those young interests of the name, the three small ones there.

"What do you think of the prevailing wind?" we inquired of James, when we stood at the door a moment watching them leave the yard. "It's mostly south, Ellen" he noted. "It's surely better than one from the north — warmer, that is. And good for the piglets!" he added with a smile. "If they get a day or so over their heads..." he nodded.

Comfortable they were, when opening the piggery door noiselessly and on silent shoes, we came to look in on them later. Cuddled beside the young mother, they were napping, and she well content and kind in this her first motherhood.

It comes to mind now that among the many lovelinesses of today was that of the moonrise which came past the edge of the dusk. Twilight had fallen fently. We had watched the shadows creep into the low of the valley, and also spread a lightsome veil along the hilltops. The afterlight, a time of enchantment had taken Tabby on chosen steps on bared sod down to the mill... We could hear the fall of the water at the spillway, and inter - mingling with that familiar sound, were those of the evening's chorings. The questions: "Did that filly in the box - stall get her hay? Are those cows in the polebarn fed? And now what about that next sow? Don't you think we should put those rails in place in her pen? Better be sure than sorry, you know!" So pleasant a time this is on a farm, that which brings in the dusky shadows over the land.

"Hadn't I better turn on a light?" Peter queried bustling in. "I don't like this dark."

"But when your eyes become accustomed to it, it's not dark" we said. "Let's" we suggested "leave it like this, and watch the moon rise."

Its approach brightened the sky above a barn - gable. And then presently we watched it climb above the roofs of the buildings there. Nearer us, and limned prettily against the moon's fullness was the dark tracery of a maple's widespread branches. And now all about us, our world was silvered.

"It's a miracle" we said.

"What is a miracle?"

"Oh things happening we can't seem to find a reason for: daylight and dark, sunset and moonrise, kittens being born, and calves, and piglets and..."

"... a lot of things" he nodded.

And another Friday, one of April's chosen ones, goes now along the silvered night - trails.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good - night.....
