FIGHTER WITH ATOMIC PUNCH

Newsmen are dwarfed by the United States Air Force's new YF12A omterceptor, a javelin-like bomber killer designed to speed at more than 2,0000 miles an hour as it was unveiled at Edwards Air Force Base, California, Wednesday. The plane had been announced by President Johnson last February—it was then known as the A-11. It carried a 12-foot rocket that can be armed with conventional or nuclear warhead. (AP Wirephoto)

Mental Changes Needed To Cope With Automation

By ALAN WALKER

LONDON (C)—A Canadian labor department official says the leisure produced by the age of automation may result in world apathy and "a sort of beer and television culture."

In a report submitted to an 18-country international conference on older workers, Ian Campbell said experts disagree strongly on what automation will do to the world.

Optimists saw an end to jobs that are "dull, dirty and undignified." Pessimists predicted unemployment and misery.

But automation is inevitable and countries must strive to adjust their thinking and customs rapidly as change occurs, the Canadian added.

His report is to be discussed at the conference opening today.

The seminar on job re-design and occupational training for older workers is sponsored by the organization for economic co-operation and development.

Campbell, co-ordinator of civilian rehabilitation for Canada, discussed the impact of the changing age structure of the world's population.

"In the last century, development of medical diagnostic skills and ability to treat and cure complex physical ailments has given many a new measure of good health and many more survive to become participating members of the work force," he said.

Most of his examples were drawn from Canada where, "despite the modifying influence of high immigration after the Second World War, a slow but steady aging of the population has taken place and will undoubtedly continue."

Campbell said the term "older worker" in Canada is applied to anyone who, because of advancing age, has difficulty getting or keeping a job. He painted a dark picture for such persons.

"The male older worker is likely to be head of a family . . . if he is not continuously employed his children may have to terminate their education prematurely.

MAY BECOME CHARGE

"Ultimately, his family may become a charge on the public purse, with humiliating results upon what might have been a proud and independent family."

Campbell said both workers and employers must be educated. Workers must learn new skills to keep up with rapid technological advances. Employers must be taught that the chronological age of a person is unsatisfactory as a measurement of occupational utility and adaptability. Government legislation might help.

"The introduction of a universal pension plan, which is pending (in Canada), should be instrumental in reducing the deterrent factor of pension plans on the hiring of older workers.

"Private pension plans and lack of portability in existing plans have frequently been cited as a reason for the establishment of arbitrary upper age limits in hiring. There are grounds for suspicion, however, that sometimes this reason has simply been used as an excuse to reject older individuals."

Potash Mine In Sask. Using New Process

BELLE PLAINE, Sask. (CP) Seven years of research and development work have unlocked the door to Saskatchewan's deepest potash reserves.

Tuesday afternoon the fruits of that work—7,000 tons of potash—left a railway siding at the mine and refinery of Kalium Chemicals Limited of Regina bound for markets in five Canadian provinces and 19 states of the U.S.

The potash was the product of the first successful solution mining process for potash in the world.

Other potash mines, including the International Minerals and Chemical Corporation operation which ushered in Saskatchewan's potash industry in 1962, use a shaft-mining process similar to that used in coal mining.

Details of Kalium's solution process are kept secret, but basically it involves forcing water down multiple drill holes to dissolve potash ore, pumping the solution to the surface and obtaining potash from the solution by crystallization and evaporation.

BECOMES COSTLY

Shafts used in mining potash can be sunk only only to about 3,500 feet because beyond that depth it becomes extremely costly to maintain a shaft against tremendous sub-ground-level pressures.

The solution mining process opens up reserves at depths greater than 5,000 feet.

The potash beds underlying Saskatchewan — believed the largest high-grade reserves in the world—tilt downward from a depth of 2,000 feet in the central part of the province to 7,000 feet at the U.S. border.

Much of the research work in developing the solution process was done in the big laboratories of Armour and Company and Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, U.S. firms each with a 50 per cent interest in Kalium.

Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Armour put up the $40,000,000 needed to build the mine and refinery near this town 20 miles west of Regina. Kalium's is the second potash operation in the province.

Kalium General Manager Boyd Willett, who with Premier Ross Thatcher presided at official plant opening ceremonies Tuesday, said production capacity was equal to that at the International Minerals and Chemical plant—1,200,000 tons a year.

Employment Red Tape Cut Planned

OTTAWA (CP)—Some of the red tape will be eliminated in this winter's version of the federal program to encourage the hiring of unemployed workers over 45.

The program was tried out last winter and almost flopped before it got off the ground, despite a $198,000 advertising campaign. There were complaints that it had too many restrictions.

Informed sources say labor department experts have spent the summer preparing a revised plan which is expected to be before Labor Minister Mac-Eachern for approval shortly.

The fair which opens on the Forum grounds here Oct. 20, continues until Nov. 7.
