WOODED IN THE DOCKS.

There were twenty-seven persons charged with various offences before his honor that morning. It was only about eighteen months ago.
One of the accused was a young girl about seventeen, who was weeping bitterly. The usual crowd of hangers on to the police court was leaning eagerly at the misfortunate tramp, the irraclaimable drunkard, the foreheadless petit larcenist, and the burly burglar.

But there was something in this young girl's sobs, in the sorrow of the fair-haired maiden who had passed the night in the same cell with drunken prostitutes, female dive thieves and women of the worst class, that was heart-breaking.
Even the bailiff of the court—accustomed to criminal misery, and ensured to the scenes of suffering from the suicide of a wanton to the execution of a murderer and his parting with his mother and sister—even the bailiff felt touched, and walking up to the railing whispered some kind word in her ear.

And next to her sat a young man as pale as death. The humiliation of his position stood out in bold relief in his attitude and in every feature of his face, in the nervous clutch of his hands, in the shifting of his feet, the disarranged hair and the silently expressed suffering.
The judge was late that morning, and kept the prisoners waiting.

'Don't cry,' the young man was saying to the girl who sat next to him. 'I am sure you have done nothing wrong.
I would pledge my life you have not.
Tell me your troubles and I will tell you mine. I have been with a wholesale jeweller for two years, and I got into bad company, took some gold that I was to work up into a bracelet and sold it. I first accused some one of having stolen it, but last night I confessed. They had me arrested, and I shall plead guilty and take my punishment.'

The girl turned her head quickly, and between her sobs said:
'But I—I have done nothing wrong; only one of the girls at the store where I worked put some laces in my pocket because—because she is jealous of me, and then they found it there, and a policeman came, and—oh my heart is breaking!'

'Hugh Murray, accused of robbing his employer, what have you to say?'
'Guilty!'
His face was whiter than ever, but his mouth was firm and resolute, and after he had said the word that made him a convict, he faced the magistrate and said:
'Your Honor, I have said guilty, because I should be a liar if I said anything else; but, your honor, I have this to add to my plea: I never drank wine in all my life until last Friday night, and I was utterly under its influence when I took that gold.'

At this juncture an elderly man stepped forward and said, in a voice choked with emotion: 'Your honor, I am this young man's employer, and I am very sorry that I have taken these steps now.
With your permission I will withdraw the charge.'

But his honor only looked a little dimly through his spectacles and said:
'Too late; complaint sworn to, arrest made, prisoner pleads guilty.'

And it came to pass that Hugh Murray expiated the one criminal act of his life by six months in the house of correction.
But before he left the dock he managed to whisper to his neighbor: 'Tell me your name wont you? I have been so bad, and I am sure you are so good, and perhaps when my punishment is over you who are so gentle will let me come and see you and call you my friend.'

And she, with her great eyes all bleared with tears, said faintly: 'My name is Isabel—Isabel Daly. I hope you won't be bad again, and that they won't be unkind to you.'

And he passed out of the dock with these words ringing in his ears: 'I hope you won't be bad again, and that they won't be unkind to you.' And when he reached the cell from which they were to take him away to the house of correction, the firmness that kept him up so far all left him, and crouched on the cold stones, he burst into a passionate fit of weeping.
He was not long alone, for his employer had followed him, and the once severe master was now as badly broken down as the clerk whom he had caused to be punished so severely. The old jeweller put his arm around Hugh's neck and for several minutes could not speak.
At last he said:
'My poor boy, I wish I could undo this. When I saw you standing in the dock, you made me think of a boy of my own who was ruined by the wine cup, and left me for I don't know where.
What can I do? How can I undo this?'

There was no reply, for both hearts were too full to speak for a moment; but the young man at last raised his head and said:
'I was not crying like a baby for my punishment, and I had nothing but good will to you. If you have been harsh to me, I don't know it. Let me be candid with you. I was a thief, and I was a drunkard—a thief for the first time and a drunkard for the first time; but still I was both. If you have been harsh, then, when my punishment is over, help me to go somewhere where I can get work—a long way off, where my story is not known, and as I live, I will repay your kindness tenfold. And there is a young girl, he continued, 'charged with stealing some lace, up stairs. Will you see her?

I am sure she is innocent, and in the dock she forgot all her trouble for a moment, to ask me never to be bad again. It was that, Mr. Balden, which made me give way so weakly.'

The parting was a very sad one, but the inevitable had to come, and Hugh Murray was for six months to come only 'No. 137,' in the western corridor.
A few days after he had been in prison he received a trunk full of new clothing from his late employer, some luxuries in the way of food, etc., that were specially permitted by the warden, and the following letter:

My Dear Hugh,—Please accept the accompanying little gifts from me, and keep up a good heart. I send you some useful books with which to employ your time.
Your friend, who was in such troubles, was perfectly innocent, and was discharged, her arrest having been a conspiracy, and she is now head saleswoman of the house where she was accused of theft. I called and told her yesterday how bitterly you suffered from her sympathy, and the noble girl burst into tears and bade me tell you to be of good courage and never be bad again.'

A year after this there was a little quiet wedding in Toronto, Canada, and the bridegroom was a successful young jeweller just started in business, and president of one of the total abstinence societies, while the bride's name was Isabel Daly. And as he held her to his heart after the ceremony, he whispered; darling do you remember that you were wooded in a prison dock?

The one strange thing about the wedding was, however, that when they got to their new little home there was a letter addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Murray, and it had a smudge on it just as if an old-fashioned salt tear had fallen on it, and all that was inside of it was a check for $1,000 signed by Everett Balden.

French and English Speaking Canadians.
Various indications from time to time appearing on the surface show that the old-time distrust of each other by the French and the English speaking Canadians is readily passing away. Sir Hector Langlois's reception in Ontario, warm and hearty as it was, showed that so far as the English-speaking inhabitants of Canada are concerned they are not influenced by the miserable spirit of petty intrigue which re-joices to sow dissensions between the English and the English speaking French who live in this portion of the Queen's realm.
The warmth of the reception accorded to Mr. Caron, Minister of Militia, in Prince Edward Island, and other Eastern provinces, shows that the evil spirit is being—has been exorcised. The same cordial feeling is shown on the other side. Hon. Mr.
Loranger spoke warmly the other day about the good understanding—the 'harmony' that exists between the English and French inhabitants, all of whom are equally proud of being subjects of Her Majesty Queen Victoria. It has sometimes been made a charge against Sir John that he has sought to develop cordiality between the two.
But the petty provincialism to which this charge owes its origin, is rapidly passing away.—Toronto Mail.

WASHINGTON despatch says it has been discovered by a Treasury investigation, "that $132 were found charged as having been expended for candles, which, according to the custodian, were really used in the purchase of sugar and lemons used for lemonade for the Secretary, Assistant Secretaries and Chief Clerk." Now, what could have suggested candles to the officials in making the entry?
What mysterious connection is there between candles and sugar? what between candles and lemons? The item was large for candles, and thus attracted attention. We supposed, until now, that such extras as sugar and lemons were entered as stationery and contingencies.
Such used to be the custom, but a change must have been made in this respect at Washington. If those candles never shed any light in the Treasury, they have, at least, enlightened the public as to the ways of the officials.

THE NEW BRUNSWICK LOBSTER FIS-ERY.—Messrs. H. O'Leary, R. B. Noble and John H. Bell, of Richibucto, call a public meeting of those engaged in Lobster Canning, in this Province, to be held in the Court House at Richibucto on Tuesday, the 15th day of November next, at 2 o'clock, p. m., to consider the best means to adopt with a view to obtain a more suitable period for a fishing season than at present exists, and to discuss matters relating to the trade generally, and to lay the resolutions arrived at before the proper authorities.—Moncton Times.
