THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Brenda, creeping as close as possible to her father, seated herself along with him upon a bench at some distance from Minna, and kept her eyes, with a mixture of fear, pity and anxiety, closely fixed upon her. It would be difficult altogether to decipher the emotions by which this amiable and affectionate girl was agitated at the moment. Deficient in her sister's predominating quality of high imagination and little credulous, of course, to the marvellous, she could not but entertain some vague and indefinite fears on her own account, concerning the nature of the scene which was soon to take place. But these were in a manner swallowed up in her apprehensions on the score of her sister, who, with a frame so much weakened, spirits so much exhausted, and a mind so susceptible of the impressions which all around her was calculated to excite, now sat pensively resigned to the agency of one, whose treatment might produce the most baneful effects upon such a subject.

Brenda gazed at Minna, who sat in that rude chair of dark stone, her finely formed shape and limbs making the strongest contrast with its ponderous and irregular angles, her cheek and lips as pale as clay, and her eyes turned upward, and lighted with the mixture of resignation and excited enthusiasm, which belonged to her disease and her character. The younger sister then looked on Norma, who muttered to herself in a low, monotonous manner, as, gliding from one place to another, she collected different articles, which she placed one by one on the table. And lastly, Brenda looked anxiously to her father, to gather, if possible, from his countenance whether he entertained any part of her own fears for the consequences of the scene which was to ensue, considering the state of Minna's health and spirits. But Magnus Troil seemed to have no such apprehensions; he viewed with stern composure Norma's preparations, and appeared to wait the event with the composure of one who, confiding in the skill of a medical artist, sees him preparing to enter upon some important and painful operation, in the issue of which he is interested by friendship or by affection.

Norma, meanwhile, went onward with her preparations, until she had placed on the stone table a variety of miscellaneous articles, and among the rest a small chafing dish full of charcoal, a crucible, and a piece of thin sheet-lead. She then spoke aloud: "It is well that I was aware of your coming hither—ay, long before you yourself had resolved it—how should I else have been prepared for that which is now to be done? Maiden," she continued, addressing Minna, "where lies thy pain?"

The patient answered by pressing her hand to the left side of her bosom. "Even so—'tis the site of weal or wo.—And you her father and her sister, think not this the idle speech of one who talks by guess—if I can tell the ill, it may be that I shall be able to render that less severe, which may not; by any aid, be wholly amended.—The heart—ay, the heart—touch that, and the eye grows dim, the pulse falls, the wholesome stream of our blood is choked and troubled, our limbs decay like useless seaweed in a summer's sun; our better views of existence are past and gone; what remains is the dream of lost happiness, or the fear of inevitable evil. But the Reinkenar must to her work—well it is that I have prepared the means."

She threw off her long dark colored mantle, and stood before them in her short jacket of light-blue wadmal, with its skirt of the same stuff, fancifully embroidered with black velvet, and bound at the waist with a chain or girdle of silver, formed into singular devices. Norma next undid the fillet which bound her grizzled hair, and shaking her head wildly caused it to fall in dishevelled abundance over her face and around her shoulders, so as almost entirely to hide her features. She then placed a small crucible on the chafing-dish already mentioned,—dropped a few drops from the vial on the charcoal blow—pointed towards it her wrinkled forefinger, which she had previously moistened with liquid from another small bottle, and said with a deep voice, "Fire, do thy duty!"—and the words were no sooner spoken, than, probably by some chemical combination of which the spectators were not aware, the charcoal which was under the crucible became slowly ignited; while Norma, as if impatient of the delay, threw hastily back her disordered tresses, and while her features reflected the sparkle and red light of the fire, and her eyes flashed from amongst her hair like those of a wild animal from its cover, blew fiercely till the whole was in an intense glow. She paused a moment from her toil, and muttering that the elemental spirit must be thanked, recited, in her usual monotonous, yet wild mode of chanting, the following verses:—

"Thou so needful, yet so dread,
With cloudy crest, and wing of red;
Though, without whose genial breath,
The north would sleep the sleep of death:
Who dost give to warm the cottage hearth,
Yet hastiest proud palaces to earth,—
Brightest, keenest of the Powers,
Which form and rule this world of ours,
With my rhyme of Runic,
Thank thee for thy agency."

She then severed a portion from the small mass of sheet-lead which lay upon the table, and, placing it in the crucible, subjected it to the action of the lighted charcoal, and, as it melted, she sung,—

"Old Reinkenar, to thy art
Mother Hertha sends her part;
She, whose gracious bounty gives
Needful food for all that lives,
From the deep mine of the earth,
Gave the mystic metal forth,
Doom'd amidst disjunct stones,
Long to cere a champion's bones,
To assist old Norr's art."
"Mother Earth, say thanks are paid."

She then poured out some water from the jar into a large cup, or goblet, and sung once more, as she slowly stirred it round with the end of her staff:—

"Girdle of our islands dear,
Element of Water, here
Of our soil a furling sever
Broken mounds and ruin'd realm
On the lowly Belgian strand;
All thy fiercest rage can never
Our soil a furling sever
From our rock-defended land:
Play then gentle thou thy part:
To assist old Norr's art."
She then, with a pair of pincers, removed the crucible from her chafing-dish, and pour-

Railway Tariffs.

An opinion of some interest regarding railway regulation in Canada, in the light both of Canadian experience, and of the experiment being tried in the United States, was lately given before the Royal Commission on Railways, by Mr. Joseph Hickson, general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, who has a high standing as an authority on matters of railway administration. Mr. Hickson, who speaks of course from the railroad point of view, does not think that it would be altogether practicable for a permanent railway commission to deal with so great an extent of territory as Canada. As regards the asserted need of guarding the public against unjust discrimination, he holds that there has been practically no culpable discrimination in Canada, and that the common law affords ample protection to shippers. The best correctives in such a matter are, he says, publicity of tariffs and the interests of the companies themselves. The application of the short-hand principle in Canada might, he thinks, be injurious to the carrying interests of the country without conferring any advantage on the public.

The Teacher's Art.

Col. Parker says:—"All real teachers must take the highest and broadest possible view of the work they are to do. He who degrades pedagogics to a trade, to be practiced for the sole purpose of getting dollars, is not a teacher and can never be one. Teaching is not mechanical routine nor imitative art, but the judicious application of great principles with an intelligent and loving purpose to accomplish the highest attainable good. All true or correct teaching arouses the mental powers to conscious action. It wastes neither time nor energy in repetitions of useless forms, but appeals directly to consciousness in such manner as to arouse mental activity. This being done the acquisition of knowledge becomes comparatively easy, and always a pleasure. There are, properly speaking, no grades in the art of teaching. That is, no primary-grade teachers, grammar-trade teachers, specialists are necessities of imperfections in teaching. They are the necessary outgrowth of misconceptions of the true work of teaching."

Coal in the States.

The past year has been one of the most prosperous, nominally, in the history of the industry. The Lehigh region companies have not been at work since the second week in September, but the Schuylkill and Wyoming regions, producing together generally about 75 per cent. of the total Pennsylvania anthracite output, have, notwithstanding the strike of 25,000 Lehigh miners during nearly one-third of the year, held up the production so that the total for the calendar year, 1887, is placed (as to quantity shipped) at 34,977,407 tons, against 32,399,456 in 1886, an increase of 2,600,000 tons, or about 8 per cent. If the customary allowance of 6 per cent. for coal used at and about the mines be added we find the total actual quantity of coal mined to be about 37,000,000 as compared with 34,300,000 tons the year before.

Prominent People and Their Ages.

His Holiness the Pope will be 78 on the 2nd March. Prince Bismarck and Sir John Macdonald were both born in 1815. The birthday of the former is, curiously, the 1st of April, but the world is, we should suppose pretty well convinced that there is very little connection between him and an April fool. Sir John Macdonald celebrated his 73rd birthday on the 11th instant, Sir Henry Cavillson, the great Assyriologist, will be 78 in April. The ex-Empress Eugenie will be 62 in May. The Duke of Cambridge, Commander in Chief of the British Army, is three months older than Her Majesty, his cousin, and will be 69 on the 26th of March. The beautiful Empress of Austria, who was the cynosure of all eyes in the English hunting fields a year or two ago, is 57. Mrs. Bright is 79. The King of Holland is 71. The Emperor of Brazil, 63. The King of Denmark, father of the Czarine, the Princess of Wales, and the King of Greece will be 70 in April.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind.

Ashes from the volcano of Cotopaxi, which fell at a distance of 120 miles from the mountain, was found by analysis to consist of quartz, felspar, maquetteite and specular iron ore. Silver was present at the rate of 200 grains per ton.

F. W. KINSMAN & Co.—Gentlemen: For some time I have contemplated sending you a line or two expressive of the great value Mrs. Bradee and myself place upon Adamson's Balsam, which we have used for years with ever-increasing satisfaction. It is a most excellent remedy for coughs, and an agreeable medicine to take. Chas. W. Bradee, Pastor Methodist Episcopal Church, Augusta, Me. Trial size 10 cents.

The Papal Jubilee committee gives every infant born in Rome on Jan. 1, and christened Leo or Leonine, a savings bank book with 100 francs deposited in the name of the child.
