USE FOR SCRAPS OF TIN.

Employed Largely to Stop Rat Holes in Houses and Factories.

A two horse load of tin clippings was being transferred to the rear basement of a prominent hotel. It had come from a can factory, and the narrow, curling strips had become so twisted and intertwined as to form a conglomerate mass that was moved with the greatest difficulty by two sturdy fellows with stable forks.

A bystander who was curious enough to inquire what use a swell hotel had for such truck was answered by an attaché of the house: "We use it for rats. I mean the big, gray fellows with whiskers. The hotel rat is bigger, bolder and wiser than any other rat. He laughs at traps, fattens on poison, and the killing or chasing of dogs, cats and ferrets is his pet diversion. Even when energetic measures have rid us of the pests they are with us again in augmented force within a day or two. They will tunnel through almost anything for incredible distances. It is their boring ability that has given us so much trouble hitherto. No matter how we closed up their passageways, the routes were promptly reopened. Filling the holes with broken glass was considered a good scheme until we found that with marvelous patience they removed the glass piece by piece.

"But we think we've got them now. With this tangled up tin we construct a sort of abatis, covering all places where the beasts are likely to enter our cellars. They can't get through it. They can't chew it, and they can't carry it away as they do broken bottles, for, when Mr. Rat takes hold of a single strip of the tin, he finds it an inseparable part of a network weighing many pounds."—Philadelphia Record.

A Tall Rat Story.

The London Field tells this story: A rat was caught alive on board a British naval vessel in a trap, and the beast was thrown from the trap into the water without being killed. A large gull that was following in the wake of the ship to pick up scraps of food thrown overboard by the steward, stopped several times, endeavoring to pick the rat up. Once the bird got too close to the rat's jaws and the beast grabbed it by the neck. After a short fight the rat succeeded in killing the bird.

When the gull was dead, the rat scrambled upon the bird's body, and, hoisting one wing as a sail and using the other as a rudder, succeeded in steering for the shore. Whether the rat reached shore or not is the question, since the ship soon got out of sight of the skipper and his craft.

A Wily Watchmaker.

The following story is told of the late Sir John Bennett, the watchmaker: He was, with two friends, traveling up to town from an outlying place some 15 or 20 miles distant, when a little dispute arose as to the exact distance of the journey. The two friends were emphatic in their contradictions of each other's statements, and eventually offered to back their own opinions. At this point Sir John came to the rescue. He would not bear of a money bet, but consented to allow them to settle matters by betting a ten guinea (Bennett's) watch.

Yielding to Medical Advice.

"Mabel, the doctor says you drink entirely too much coffee. It is not good for you."

"Why, mamma, it doesn't hurt me a particle, and I like it too well to quit using it. I just couldn't get along without my coffee."

"And Mme. Lockes, the celebrated authority on beauty, says it is ruinous to the complexion."

"Oh, well, if the doctor thinks I ought not to drink it any more I'll drop it of course."—Chicago Tribune.

A Unique Sign.

In the line of novelties of advertising there is one Chicago druggist whose departure would be hard to discount. This gentleman, whose place of business is in Hyde park district, announces that he has a choice line of blue blooded Angora cats. His business cards bear a picture of an aristocratic looking tabby in one corner, and after the address are the words, "Drug Store and Cafeteria."—American Druggist.

AWFUL WICKEDNESS.

Boarding School Young Ladies Shocked at the Actresses' Engagements.

When the weather is fine, neither too hot nor too cold, and the preceptress herself has tested it by sticking her head out of the window, four or five of the most dignified pupils of a North Side boarding school for girls are allowed to accompany that learned lady in a stroll about the most elevating parts of Lincoln park. When the boarding school girl does not follow the lines indicated by cosmic opera librettists and farce writers, she is apt to go to the other extreme and be very stiff indeed. She has more starch about her than a steam laundry. She can frown you out of existence at a blow. Her trivialities must be all of the most ethereal and esthetic kind. She is bound by convention and walled in by formality, and, above all, she is the properest creature of a very proper age.

Three or four of the latter class were seated one afternoon on a rustic torture endeavoring to extract beauty out of the H2O of Lake Michigan. Their guide and teacher wore one of those smiles which, to borrow an expression from photography, may be called a long exposure.

Presently, on another seat, within easy hearing distance, sat two fashionably dressed ladies. They were members of the dramatic profession, although no one could have guessed it by their appearance. From their piquant ways the girls from the boarding school took them to be butterflies of society, perhaps ornamenting the very top set. They became immediately interested.

"Did you hear about my new engagement?" said one of the newcomers.

"Another already? You don't mean it!" said the other. "Why, that's four you've had in as many months."

"I know it," responded the first, "and this may not last very long either."

It is needless to say that the five young ladies and their preceptress were shocked. They had never heard, even read, of such duplicity.

"How do you like his company?" asked one.

"Not at all," replied the other.

"That's too bad," said the first. "I should think you would be very happy."

"I would be," replied the other, "but, you see, I'm playing a dual role."

"Well, it may be trying," responded the second, "but I wish I were in your place. Is he an 'angel'?"

"No, but that young man whom he calls his partner is."

This was more than the auditors could stand, and, at a signal from the preceptress, they marched home thoroughly horror-stricken.—Chicago Exchange.
