CAUGHT IN HIS OWN TRAP.

A girl, young and pretty, and above all, gifted with an air of admirable candor...

"Monsieur, I have come to consult you upon a grave affair. I want you to oblige a man I love to marry me in spite of himself. How shall I proceed?"

"The gentleman of the bar had, of course a sufficiently elastic conscience. He reflected a moment, and then, being sure that no third person overheard him, replied hesitatingly:

"Mademoiselle, according to our law, you always possess the means to force a man to marry you. You must remain on three occasions alone with him; you can then go before a judge and swear that he is your lover.

"And will that suffice, Monsieur?"

"Yes, Mademoiselle, with one further condition."

"Well?"

"Then you will produce witnesses who will make oath to having seen you remain a good quarter of an hour with the individual who is said to have tiptled with your affections."

"Very well, Monsieur, I will retain you as counsel in the management of this affair. Good day."

A few days afterwards the young lady returned. She was mysteriously received by the lawyer, who scarcely giving her time to seat herself, questioned her with the most lively curiosity.

"Capital, capital."

"Persevere in your design, Mademoiselle; but mind, the next time you come to consult me give me the name of the young man you are going to make so happy in spite of himself."

"You shall have it without fail."

A fortnight afterward, the young lady again knocked at the door of the counsel's room. No sooner was she within, she flung herself into a chair, saying that the walk had made her breathless. Her counsel endeavored to reassure her, made her inhale salts, and even proposed to unloose her garments.

"It is useless, Monsieur!" she said, "I am much better."

"Well now, tell me the name of the fortunate mortal?"

"Well, then, the fortunate mortal, be it known to you, is—yourself!" said the young beauty, bursting into a laugh. "I love you, I have been here three times tete-a-tete with you, and my four witnesses are below, ready and willing to accompany me to a magistrate," gravely continued the narrator.

The lawyer, thus caught, had the good sense not to get angry. The most singular fact of all is that he adores his young wife, who, by the way, makes an excellent housekeeper.

"A great brute of a husband" advertises in a morning paper for a "stout, able-bodied man to hold his wife's tongue"

A man whose wife had run away told his friends to reserve their pity for him till she came back again.

A young lady told a typo friend he might print a kiss on her cheek, but he must not publish it.

A shoemaker received a note from a lady to whom he was particularly attached, requesting him to make her a pair of shoes, and not knowing exactly the style she required, he despatched a written missive to her, asking her whether she would like them "Wround or Esq. Toad."

The fair one, indignant at this rich specimen of orthography, replied, "Knechtler."

A young man up town who was noted for his idleness, stitted in justification that he was the owner of one of the completest labor saving machines—one, in fact, which precluded all necessity for his doing anything towards his own support. "What was it?" Was the general inquiry. "The fortune which my father starved himself to accumulate!" was the reply.

A pretty young Americaness, whose Christian name is Anna, on receiving a cigar from a young gentleman who had not pluck enough to say he wanted to marry her, twirled it playfully beneath her nose, and looking archly at him, popped the question thus, "Have-Ann?"

A late celebrated judge, who stooped very much when walking, had a stone thrown at him one day, which fortunately passed over him without hitting him. Turning to his friend, he remarked, had I been an upright judge, that might have caused my death."

An Editor thus corrects the following typographical blunder: "We tried to say yesterday that Chris-ten-dom had denied pants, and all that sort of thing to women. The types made us say decreed. Perhaps the types were right."

An old lady, looking at the curiosities in a museum, came to a couple of sea-dogs, and after gazing at them with wonder, inquired of a wag who stood near if they barked. "No, madam," says the wag "their bark is on the sea."

One person having asked another if he believed in the appearance of spirits, "No," was the reply, "but believe in their disappearance, for I've missed a bottle of gin since last night."

A lady in Calcutta, asked a colonel for a mango; and as he roled it along, it fell into a plate of kist-missts, a species of grape. "How naturally," exclaimed the colonel, man goes to kiss-miss."

A real-estate agent informs the public that he has "a beautiful cottage in Westchester county for sale, containing ten rooms and eight acres of land.

A hard-hearted old skinflint turned his son out of door the other day because he could not pay the curmudgeon his house-rent. What a pay rent that man must be.

A man whose wife had run away told his friends to reserve their pity for him till she came back again.

Gilpin asked his friend why he choose so little a wife. "Why," said he, "I thought you had known that of all the wife we choose the least."

Top-Dressing Grass Lands.

It was justly considered the height of unreasonableness and exactingness in ancient days, that an oppressed people were compelled to make brick without straw. While the necessary material was withheld, the full rate of product was expected and demanded.

Something not unlike this injustice is to be seen in the treatment to which meadows are frequently subjected by their owners. They are mowed year after year, and if they do not maintain the point of productiveness they are reached at first, complaint is made as if some grievous wrong had been done the proprietor. Now repeated mowings are very exhausting, and unless manure is applied in the shape of top-dressing, it is unreasonable to suppose that the meadows will maintain their fertility.

We should like to know how many P. E. Island farmers ever think of top dressing their grass lands. We are persuaded their number is but small. It is the subject of wide complaint that meadows in this country are soon exhausted, and do not hold out as they do in Britain.

One reason for this is the practice of repeated mowing without manuring. We know several intelligent agriculturists on this continent who maintain that there is no necessity whatever for breaking up sward-land, and declare as the actual result of trial, that if a meadow be only treated to liberal doses of manure, it will continue to yield heavy cuttings of hay year after year. The liquid droppings of horses and cows should be carefully collected for this purpose. Liquid manure is the very best application for the purpose of keeping up the fertility of grass land.

In the vicinity of Edinburgh, Scotland, meadows have been made to produce six or seven crops of grass annually by a plentiful application of liquid top-dressing, obtained from the city sewerage. The description of grass which furnishes these abundant crops of soiling is generally Italian Rye Grass, a species which grows very tall and produces fodder very much relished by horses and cattle.

Every farmer should have a liquid manure tank, into which the urine of stock should be conveyed by a drain pipe from the stable, byre and hog pens. This should be applied to the land with a watering cart constructed especially for the purpose of distributing it evenly over the land.

Instead of the liquid manure being distributed by means of a watering cart, it may be used first to saturate muck or compost, which is afterwards put on the land in the shape of top-dressing. Its effects are more lasting when thus applied than when it is conveyed to the land as a liquid. We have no doubt that a great deal of valuable meadow land is deteriorating for want of a more just and common-sense mode of treatment.

Top-dressing of liquid or solid manure, bone dust, guano, &c., will be found of great benefit when applied to such lands. The fall of the year is a good time to make such applications. The late fall and early spring rains wash the fertilizing material into the ground, so that the following year a very perceptible improvement may be confidently expected, as the result of the course recommended in this article.
