A BIG, BIG CONTRAST.

THE CHINESE GIANT AND THE PIGMY JAPAN.

The Challenged Nation in the War Many Times Larger Than the Challenger—Her Territory and Population—A Unique History Lesson.

There are many things about the war between China and Japan which make it more picturesque than ordinary wars.

Consider, first, the tremendous difference in the size of the combatants. Of course, you know that China is bigger than Japan, and has many more people; but you haven't fully understood how much bigger and how much more populous it is.

The Chinese Empire occupies the entire central portion of Eastern Asia, the biggest of the continents, and its area varies, according to different calculations, from 5,000,000 to 5,559,564 square miles. This includes all the territories over which the "Son of Heaven," who sits in his yellow satin robes in his palace at Pekin, has jurisdiction. China proper, called by its inhabitants Chunghwoh, "Middle Kingdom," or Chunhwa, "Central Flowery Land," has an area variously estimated at from 1,297,999 to 1,482,091 square miles.

Exclusive of China proper, the territory of the Chinese Empire consists chiefly of thinly inhabited regions like the great plain of Manchooria or the tremendous plateau of Thibet.

Nearly all the population of the Chinese Empire is crowded into China proper. The most reliable census figures now place this population at 420,000,000.

There are provinces in China which have a thousand inhabitants to the square mile.

Belgium, the most thickly inhabited portion of the Caucassian world, has only 600. And Belgium is a very small country. No Chinese province is small.

Except the English and Russian, the Chinese Empire is the biggest that has ever existed.

The Roman Empire at the period of its greatest expansion never included more than 2,000,000 square miles.

Neither Augustus nor any of his successors ever ruled more than 120,000,000 people, less than one third the number of those who braid their pigtails nicely every morning and whose eyes slant up to heaven without any effort.

The British Empire, with all the millions of India, falls behind China in populousness. Any one of three or four provinces in China has nearly as many people as there are in all in the United States.

All the empires, kingdoms and republics of Europe combined barely equal China in population.

If all the people of China passed before you in line and you began when you were born and lived to be a hundred years old, you couldn't count them all.

All the people of England or France could be stuck away in a corner of China, and unless you were of an inquiring disposition you wouldn't know they were there.

If the inhabitants of China were standing up in line, shoulder to shoulder, the line would reach around the world four times.

Besides being very numerous, the Chinese are vigorous physically. Some of the biggest men of the world grow in Northern China. Chang, the Chinaman, was the greatest giant of modern times.

China's Natural Resources.

The resources of China in other things as well as population are endless. It has every variety of climate and, therefore, every variety of agricultural products. Its limits run from orange groves to ice fields.

China has all sorts of metals. Its river system is rivalled only by that of the United States. The Yang-tse-Kiang and the Hoang-Ho belong in the same class with the Mississippi and the Missouri. In addition, it has many big lakes and high mountains.

China, more than any other country, is a world in itself in resources as well as character.

The old Greeks called all who were not Greeks "barbarians." Similarly, the Chinese term "barbarians" all who are not Chinese.

The Chinese believe that the world of light ends at the borders of China.

The Chinaman may dwell for a period in outer darkness, in order to gather in the coin of the barbarians, whom he dispises, but always he expects to go back to China; if not in life, at least that his ashes or his bones will reach the blessed land.

The Chinese nation is a human mass—immense, tenacious, patient and self-sufficient.

In China, wars, revolutions floods, fires and pestilences are on a scale commensurate with the population. The greatest conquests in the history of the human race were achieved there by the Tartar followers of Genghis Khan and Tamerlane.

China inflamed the imagination of Napoleon Bonaparte. After Toulon and before Montenotte he asked permission of the French Directory to accept an officer's commission in the Turkish service. He had his eye on the far East. He was filled with the sanguinary glory of Genghis Khan and Tamerlane. He said to a friend: "The East is the only theatre of mighty events. A man can win glory there." But the permission was refused. China escaped him. Europe did not.

China has had an incalculable influence upon the history of Western Europe and America. How?

Because China drove the Huns and the Turks from her borders. They wandered across Asia in great migratory bands, increasing in numbers as they came, helped to beat down the Roman Empire, totally destroyed the Byzantine Empire and made such a change in European history that it is felt to this day.

The situation and character of every reader has been influenced by that immigration, which the Chinese armies set in motion fifteen or eighteen hundred years ago.

All schoolboys have heard of the Great Wall and the Grand Canal of China. Those are two things about China that we never forget. The canal is so long and so large that people get into the habit of numbering it among the great rivers of China.

The Great Wall is man's most gigantic work. It was built to keep out the Tartars more than two thousand years ago. It is of immense height and thickness, and is 1,500 miles long. It is said that an army of 400,000 men was sent against the Tartars, and after defeating them, was employed for many years in building this wall.

The Great Wall of China is one of the few things no museum manager has tried to get for his show.

Thus, China, even more than Egypt, is the Sphinx but not the Niobe of nations.

Japan a Territorial Pigmy.

Now, look at Japan, China's pigmy antagonist! The area of all Japan is only 147,000 square miles, or exactly three times that of the State of New York. Its population, by the census of 1890, was 40,072,684, or less than one-tenth that of China.

This disproportion makes the war between China and Japan vastly interesting. Nor must it be forgotten that the war is likely to make a great increase in our knowledge of that hidden country, China.

His Family Sorrows.

At one of the village stations a woman with a parrot in a cage got on the train, and soon after she had taken a seat and while the bird was solemnly eyeing the passengers around him a jolly looking old man came from the rear end of the car and inquired.

"Madam, is that a talkin' parrot?"

"Yes, sir," she replied.

"Brought up in your own family?"

"Mostly, sir."

"Ah, there!" suddenly screamed the bird as he gave his wings a flop.

"That is bewtiful—bewtiful!" chuckled the old man as he rubbed his hands together. "Madam, I used to own a parrot."

"Yes?"

"He was a great comfort to myself and wife, who were childless. He would swear by the hour. Does your bird swear?"

"No, sir," she stiffly replied.

"No? You should have taught him to, madam. You don't know how much solace can be got from a swearing parrot."

"You bet!" yelled the parrot.

"Bewtiful—bewtiful! If he does not swear, he could easily be taught. He uses all kinds of slang, of course?"

"No, sir. He uses only those two expressions, and I'm giving him away on that account."

"You shouldn't do it madam! You don't know what a comfort it is to have a slangy parrot around the house. My parrot could say, 'Pull down your vest,' 'Shoot that hat,' 'Get on to the shape' and many other bewtiful things. When my wife lay dying, he called out, 'Hold on to your breath!'"

At that moment the conductor come along, and seeing that the woman was annoyed he suggested to the old man that he return to his seat.

"Oh, certainly, certainly!" was the reply. "I was just going. Seeing the parrot has put me in mind of my family sorrows, and I will sit down and weep. I once had both wife and parrot, but now I'm all alone in this world—all alone! The last words my wife spoke were, 'Good-by, Richard!' and the last speech the parrot made was, 'Nail up your chin!' I hoped this was a bird like mine, but I've been disappointed. Yes, I'll sit down."

He returned to his seat, and for half an hour he wiped the tears from his eyes. I finally went over to him and asked if there was any way I could let the sunshine into his darkened life, and after a pull at his nose he replied:

"Waal, yes. Invite me to step out on the platform to take a nip from your bottle!"

We went out and nipped, and his sorrowing soul sorrowed no more.

Superstitions About Fire.

Where a fire burns upon the hearth the Germans say that lightning never strikes.

In Cambridgeshire, England, there is a curious belief to the effect that a fire started by a lightning stroke can only be quenched with milk.

In Devonshire if a fire burns blue and dead it is thought to be a forerunner of death or disaster in that house.

When a Russian family moves from one house to another they always rake all the fire from the hearth of the old domicile and carry it in a closed pot to their new residence.

The Sicilians say that a fire will not burn man born on St. Paul's day (January 25), but that if a woman be burned upon that day the sore will never heal and will eventually cause her death.

In Greece, when one peasant borrows fire from another's hearth to kindle his own, the owner of the fire must accompany the borrower to his home "to see the fire blaze," otherwise the one making the loan will have his house and goods destroyed by the devouring element.

In Wales and in Cornwall miners burn their hats upon the birth of a male child; if a girl be born his neighbors burn it for him.

Irish Blackthorns.

In the County Cavan, said an Irishman to a reporter, blackthorns are reared as tenderly as babies. A blackthorn is not cut at random in a wood, as most people think. A promising shoot is marked and watched day by day until it is thick and strong enough to cut.

The roots growing are the best, and they are carefully dug up so that enough of the bulbous root is left to make the handle knob. It is then pruned, the butt placed in warm ashes night after night to season, and then it is cut into shape and placed in pickle.

After this it is oiled and rubbed with chamois leather for hours at a time. Then a magpie is killed and the blood drained into a cup, and with this blood the blackthorn is polished until it becomes black and glossy. Then the iron ferrule is put on, and it is ready for a function.

Written by Watts.

"How Did My Heart Rejoice to Hear," was written by Watts. It was formerly entitled, "Going to Church."
