

Canada.

To Canada our country: land Of verdurous tith and breezy plain, Thy forests, like an emerald band, Expanding, stretch from main to main.

Thy rivers, like a silvery line, The forest's murmuring mazes thread; And autumn's gentlest zephyrs twine Their beauteous garlands for thy head.

A thousand leagues of open sea, And breezes fair as heaven blows, Await the freighted argosy To wait her wheresoe'er she goes.

Till Time's last quivering pulse shall cease, May this be ever said of thee: Here lies the calm domain of peace, And here the empire of the free!

A people thine, when odds assail Thy battlements of liberty, Who, leagued with justice, shall prevail, And teach the world they will be free.

May statesmen to thy councils come Sagacious, bold, with truth imbued, Whose voice shall strike oppression dumb, Whose aim shall be the people's good.

Allied in one surpassing cause, And vying in their patriot zeal To shape the state to sovereign laws Enacted for the common weal.

Until, from Truth's white rock shall rise The glittering dome of Empire's form; And back in blue ethereal skies Above Corruption's ravenous storm.

God bless thee still do thou engage To nurture by thy freedoms bright The poets of the golden age, The warriors of the bloodless fight. —A. M. C. Taylor.

The Earl of Dufferin.

Born fifty-eight years ago, Lord Dufferin succeeded while a boy to the barony of Dufferin and Claneboye, a well-managed estate in the most prosperous of Irish counties, and the leadership of the Liberal party of his neighborhood. But more than title, or estate, or the stir of political conflict, were the care and companionship of a beautiful and accomplished mother. A granddaughter of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, she inherited much of the sprightly genius of her ancestor, with a delicacy and refinement all her own. Her sweet songs live on in the bright cycle of Irish poetry. To those who have leisure to turn to that charming volume, "Letters from High Latitudes," she will live again in the tender homage of her son. Having acquired, almost before he had attained to manhood, a seat in the House of Lords, he had no opportunity of trying the more stormy atmosphere of the House of Commons. The discipline of Ulster politics, however, stood him in good stead. In no part of the British realm was party feeling stronger than in the northern province of Ireland. A Protestant, a land-owner, and an adherent of the Liberal party, he was one of a small minority among the whole population, one of a minute coterie among people of his own rank and station. A generous ambition drew him to political affairs, and if he was to take any part in them he must, in the then condition of Ulster, be ever in the van, his flag unfurled aloft, quick in assault, vigilant of fence. However fiercely political passion raged in this part of Ireland, manliness and intellectual force were always honored, to whatever part they belonged, and Ulsterman on all sides were proud of Lord Dufferin long before his name became known in wider fields. —J. L. Whittle, in the Manhattan for July.

Corea and Shipwrecked Seamen.

Mr. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State, has received a despatch from Mr. Foot, United States Minister at Seoul, wherein he transmits a translation of a recent decree of government of Corea, looking to the saving of the lives of shipwrecked seamen, assisting vessels in distress and preserving and rescuing property. The decree enjoins Corean officials and subjects to render every possible assistance to shipwrecked vessels off the Corean coast.

The regulations are five in number. The first provides that a white flag by day, and two lanterns by night, are to be understood as distress signals. The second provides for awards in case of relief, and for the punishment of those who willfully disregard the degree. The third states that such persons who go to the relief of vessels must act in accordance with the direction of her captain or commander. The fourth directs the Governor of the district, wherein a vessel may be wrecked, to confer with the Consul of the country to which she belongs as to the disposition of property saved and other matters pertaining thereto. In case the vessel's nation has no consular representative, the Foreign Office must be notified, and food and protection must in all cases be provided. The fifth commands governors and officials of the coast provinces to make these regulations known, to the end that they may be obeyed, and that those who render assistance may be rewarded, or punished if they disregard them.

Much interest is felt in Montreal, in regard to the approaching visit of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, which will hold its session from 27th August to September 3rd. The distinguished visitors will make an excursion to the Rocky Mountains, setting out on the 4th September, going by the Canadian Pacific Lake route, steamers making direct connection with the railway on each side. Of the $25,000 granted by the Dominion Parliament, $5,000 will be used to defray the expenses of the meeting itself; and a fund is now being raised to guarantee the association against loss in connection with the publication of their proceedings. In addition to the Rocky Mountains excursions, excursions are being arranged at Ottawa, Quebec, etc. Great preparations are being at Montreal Toronto and other places which will be visited, to give the members a due reception.
