A MASTER STUDENT DIES FROM A STRANGE CAUSE A POST MORTEM EXAMINATION REVEALS THE SECRET.

(Toronto Globe, Dec. 5)

Mr. Albert E. Haynes, the student of McMaster Hall, who was suffering from peritonitis, died on Thursday night at 11 o'clock. He was quite conscious up to the hour of his death though suffering considerably. The facts of his illness correctly stated are as follows:—One week ago yesterday he complained of a dull pain in his stomach, which rapidly became more acute until it was thought advisable to send for a doctor. Dr. Robinson was called and attended him. In looking up the probable causes, and from questioning the patient, the doctor ascertained that he had been struck in the stomach by a football two weeks before. He had also played football the night previous to the first appearance of pain in the stomach, and had taken a sponge bath afterwards. He had also eaten some cheese before going to bed. These circumstances, either singly or in conjunction, might have caused the trouble. The patient continued to grow rapidly worse, the inflammation spreading over the abdomen and becoming more and more acute. Dr. Artherton and Dr. Graham were also called in, and it was soon declared that he could not live. After his death Dr. Robinson requested the parents of the deceased, who had been nursing him since the disease became serious, to allow a post mortem examination to be made, saying that he suspected that the seat of the trouble was in what is sometimes called the second stomach. After some hesitation they acceded to the request. The part of the human anatomy which corresponds to the second stomach in ruminating animals has long been a puzzle to scientists. It serves no purpose as far as can be seen. It is a small bag below the stomach and is closed up. Sometimes cherry stones or other indigestible, small, hard, substances get into the cavity, and almost certain death is the result. These cases are, however, comparatively rare. Evolutionists say that it is the remains of a second stomach, and hence that man was once a ruminating animal. Dr. Artherton, who performed the operation, suspecting that the trouble was in this part, at once proceeded to open it, and found two small stones. They were the formation of ordinary pebbles. The largest was about the size of a small bean, and was perfectly round and smooth. The other was angular in shape, and had worn through the membrane. It is supposed that the shock of the football may have hastened the wearing of the angular pebble through the membrane, but it is thought that death would ultimately have resulted from the presence of the pebbles in this part whether he had been struck by the ball or not. The case is one of interest to medical men and scientists.

What the Indians Were Hanged For!

The murderous case for which the Indians were hanged at Battleford, is thus described by Mrs. Gowanlock, who was an eyewitness of the butchery:—

"We had only gone but a short distance from the house when we heard the reports of guns, but thought they were firing in the air to frighten us; but they had shot Quinn, Dill and Gilchrist, whom I did not see fall. Mr. and Mrs. Delaney were a short distance ahead of my husband, I having my husband's arm. Mr. Williscraft, an old grey-headed man about 75 years of age, came running by us, and an Indian shot at him and knocked his hat off, and he turned round and said, 'Oh! don't shoot! Don't shoot!' But they fired again, and he ran screaming and fell in some bushes. On seeing this I began crying, and my husband tried to comfort me, saying, 'My dear wife, be brave to the end, and immediately an Indian behind us fired, and my husband fell beside me, his arm pulling from mine. I tried to assist him from falling. He put out his arms from me and fell, and I fell down beside him, and buried my face on his, while his life was ebbing away so quickly, and was prepared for the next shot myself, thinking I was going with him too. But death just then was not ordained for me. I had yet to live. An Indian came and took me away from my dying husband's side, and I refused to leave. Oh! to think of leaving my dear husband lying there for those cruel Indians to dance around. I begged of the Indian to let me stay with him, but he took my arm and pulled me away. Just before this I saw Mr. Delaney and a priest fall, and Mrs. Delaney was taken away in the same manner that I was. Mrs. Delaney says in her account of the massacre:—

"I had my husband by the arm. We were thus linked when old Williscraft rushed past, bare-headed. I turned my head to see what was the cause of his excitement, when I saw Mr. Gowanlock fall. I was about to speak when I felt my husband's arm drop from mine—and he said, 'I am shot too.' Just then the priests rushed up and Father Fafard was saying something in French, which I could not catch. My husband staggered over about twenty feet from me and then backed again, and fell down beside me. I bent down and raised his head upon my lap. I think over forty shots must have been fired, but I could not tell what side the shot came from that hit my husband. I called Father Fafard and he came over. He knelt down and asked my husband if he could say the 'Confiteor.' My husband said 'yes,' and then repeated the prayer from end to end. As he finished the prayer, the priest said, 'My poor brother, I think you are safe with God,' and as the words died upon his lips he received his death wound, and fell prostrate across my husband."

Tennyson's New Work.

ENGLAND'S LAUREATE SINGS OF THE BLIND SEER OF THIBES.

(Cable to N. Y. Herald.)

LONDON, Dec. 8.—I have just read an advance copy of Lord Tennyson's new book, Tiresias and Other Poems. Several of these, such as the charge of the Heavy Brigade, Early Spring and Despair, are old acquaintances, but among the twenty-six in the volume many are as new as they are welcome. The book opens with a graceful tribute of the Poet Laureate to his dead friend Fitzgerald, whose version of the Omar Khayyam was popularized through the drawings of Elihu Vedder.

NOT AT HIS BEST.

Tiresias, though one of the most elaborate poems in the volume, does not show Tennyson at his best. It has not the old ring. The poet tells the story of Peeping Tom of antiquity with some effort, and, though the poem contains fine passages, most readers will hurry on with pleasure to an exquisite and touching ballad in the Irish brogue, entitled To-morrow.

TRUE CELTIC PATHOS.

It has the true Celtic pathos, and the brogue is worthy of Killenny. Wonderfully sweet and fresh is the description of poor Molly Magee, whose lover, Danny O'Roon, strayed into a bog one night and was not heard of for forty years, when his body was fished up out of the bog unchanged by its long soaking:—

Och, Molly Magee, wid the red o' the rose an' the white o' the May,
An' yer hair as black as the night, an' yer eyes as bright as the day;
Achora! yer last little whisper was sweet as the lilt of a bird,
Achura! ye set me heart batin' to music wid ivery word,
An' sorra the queen wid her sceptre in such an elegant lan',
An' the fall of yer foot the dance was as light as snow on the lan'!

HER PET AVERSIONS.

Having shown his familiarity with the brogue, the Poet Laureate next gives us a taste of English rustic dialect. For close observation and humor, it would be hard to match. The Spinster's Sweet Arts. Men and bairns were her aversions, especially bairns, for they are:—

Halls a joompin' about me, as if they was set upon springs,
An' a haxing may hawkward questions, an' sayin' ondecant things.

BALIN AND BALAN.

Thirty-eight pages are devoted to Balin and Balan—an introduction to Merlin and Vivien. Beside the Poet's earlier idylls Balin is 'as moonlight unto sunlight,' yet it has beauties. Several editions of Tiresias are, I hear, already sold. The book is sure to be popular.

Leaders of French Journalism.

The Travelers Insurance Company, of Hartford, is a noteworthy corporation in several ways. It is the largest Accident Company in the world, and at the same time does an amount of sound life insurance which many exclusively life companies may, and probably do, envy. Besides these points of distinction, it is remarkable for its methods of popularizing and extending its influence. It is a large advertiser after the approved methods of similar institutions but in addition to such methods it continually works on broad plans of its own, which are always striking and original, and usually possess the merit of being useful to others as well as to itself. In pursuance of one of these plans, the managers of the "Travelers" have issued and distributed in large numbers a series of well executed and really interesting engravings, all of which, by virtue of artistic excellence, and the fact that they gratify a worthy curiosity in regard to famous persons or things, have had a wide popularity. Their famous picture of the Birth of the Colossus, "Liberty Enlightening the World," is probably familiar to many of our readers, as may be also their group of "American Authors" and "Representative American Journals and Journalists." This latter work they have now followed by an even finer picture in the same style called "Representative Parisian Journals and Journalists," of which we have just received a copy. As the very home of personal journalism, Paris is in a position to furnish the most interesting combinations of writers and newspapers that are anywhere to be found; and in the case of the present engraving, these combinations have been victoriously used with skill and effect. De Girardin, Casanove, Rochefort, and their confederates of the press are shown, each backed up, literally as well as figuratively, by the paper which is the engine of his personal influence. La Petit Journal, which is here reproduced with the portrait of M. Escudier, its editor, enjoys the unprecedented daily circulation of over 800,000 copies, or about double the number printed by all the New York morning dailies combined.

NOTES.

Not the promissory, but facts about WELCOME SOAP, an article that does not contain one particle of the adulterations used to reduce the cost of "Pure Goods," but does possess the value of legitimate Washing Qualities, the demand for which proves the advantage gained by the use of the genuine over Soaps of doubtful character. None should be deceived even by Red and Yellow Wrappers, or any of the imitations of the WELCOME, as a pair of clasped hands is stamped on every bar. Made by CURTIS, DAVIS & Co.
