

Seven Days A Week

by Anne Shannon

1. MONDAY: John Masefield said the best advice he ever had was this: sitting still and wishing makes no person great. The good Lord sends the fishing but you must dig the bait!

And so today we decided that that was good advice for us to follow so and we started to dig—not for fish—but to plant the glads and dahlias. Our fence is as yet a length of string to mark the spot where the actual fence will be, but nothing daunted, we went ahead and "dugged" as Mavis said, I think we shall call our efforts the "Hodge-Podge Border" for there are more varieties in it than you could imagine. We polished it off with a grapefruit tree at each end. These of course will have to be lifted in the fall, for they winter-kill. But eventually we hope to have two nice sturdy trees for pot culture, the year round.

2. TUESDAY: Compliments are so rarely to Joan Crawford, the beautiful Hollywood actress. Her friends and fans bring plenty of them. But the warmest and most spontaneous bit of praise she has received in a long time came from an unknown motorist in Arizona.

While in Arizona, working in her fine western, "Johnny Guitler," Joan learned to ride horseback. To practice, she rode each morning from the motel where she was staying to the location site, several miles away.

One morning Joan, dressed in blue jeans and plaid shirt, was entering to work, when a car drove up beside her.

"I hear there's a movie being made some place around," the driver said. "You know whereabouts?"

Joan flashed her famous smile. "Keep straight on this road. I'm on my way there now," she replied.

The motorist looked at her approvingly. "Well, I don't blame you for going to see them," he said. "Guess they use a lot of extra people in these western movies, and you're mighty pretty. Yep, mighty pretty. Wouldn't be surprised if you got a job!" he called back, as he drove on out of sight.

3. WEDNESDAY: Do you know the origin of the three-tiered wedding cake? Many a bride will be cutting just such a cake this month. The first cake with three tiers was designed in the seventeenth century by the famous English architect Sir Christopher Wren. When the Church of St. Bride, in Fleet Street, was destroyed by the fire of London in the middle of the seventeenth century, Sir Christopher was commissioned to rebuild it. He gave it an unusual tiered spire, tall and graceful.

Shortly afterward his daughter was married in this church and he decided she would have a wedding cake made in tiers—just like the spire of St. Bride's Church, of which he was particularly proud.

4. THURSDAY: Two old farmers were discussing the results of a nation-wide contest.

"Did you wife win a prize in that magazine contest?" asked John.

"No, she didn't," was the reply.

"How come? Isn't she smart enough?" John asked curiously.

"Oh, she's smart enough, all right. But, you see she entered the contest under a handicap."

"How, that?" questioned John.

"Well, she's never been able to say anything in twenty-five words or less!"

5. FRIDAY: Fillet Pinwheels sound nice don't they? They ARE nice too—so won't you try them at today's main meal!

1 pound fillets
1 pkg. spinach or 1/2 lb. chopped.
1/2 cup shredded carrots
1 tablespoon scraped onion
1 tablespoon chopped pimiento
2 tpsps. melted butter
1 tsp. lemon juice and salt and pepper.

Separate fillets. Cook spinach, drain thoroughly, and add carrot, onion and pimiento. Mix well. Place fillets, skin side up, on piece of waxed paper; overlap small pieces to make each strip about six by two inches. Combine butter and lemon juice, brush over the fish strips, sprinkle with salt and pepper.

Cover with spinach mixture, roll up and fit into greased muffin tins; bake in a hot oven (400°) for twenty minutes. To add color and flavor contrast, serve baked tomato slices—first brush thick slices with melted butter, place on a shallow baking pan and bake in the oven with the fish, during the last ten minutes.

6. SATURDAY: For the lady who wrote and asked me if I had a recipe for Rhubarb Cobbler, this should fill the bill:

4 cups rhubarb, cut into 1/2-inch pieces; 1/2 cup water; 1 1/2 cups granulated sugar; 1/2 cup flour; 1 1/4 tpsps. cinnamon; 1 1/4 cups packaged biscuit mix (or make your own favorite biscuit mix); 1/2 cup milk; 1 tbsps. granulated sugar; 1/2 tsp. cinnamon.

Put rhubarb in the oven to 350° F. Mix rhubarb with water, then mix in 1 1/2 cups sugar, flour, and 1 1/4 tsp. cinnamon. Turn into greased 13" x 9" baking dish or a 3-quart casserole. Mix the biscuit. Mix with milk, pour over the rhubarb; sprinkle combined 1 tbsps. sugar and 1/2 tsp. cinnamon on top. Bake for 40 min., then increase the oven temperature to 375° F. for 10 minutes more. Serve warm either with cream, as is, or whipped cream.

7. SUNDAY: A neighbor said to me not so long ago: "It won't be long until school is finished for this year—though it doesn't mean much to me now—just another day." Her words brought to mind this item I saw recently in a magazine. It's by Mildred P. Keeshan and it's called, "Peace Can Be An Empty Thing." Pity the home where the ringing of the school bell has ceased to matter. In a family of growing children, it is the stabilizing regulator for the entire household. Meals are on time, clothes are in readiness, and a semblance of order is established because of its regular clanging. And then one day it doesn't matter, you hear it, and all at once it brings a lump to your throat, for there is no mad scramble for books and raincoats, no hurried good-bye kisses, no slamming doors. Just peace and quiet—that peace you used to long for and have found to be such an empty thing.

And we stop and think that no matter how large our family is, one day we too, if we are spared, will have to face that day when "peace will be an empty thing."

But as Paul said dismally one day, "Why worry Mom, about the time your family will be grown up? By that time you will no doubt have grandchildren, so you can start 'mothering' all over again!" And so maybe that will be the perfect answer.

Mark Twain provides us with the closing quote for this week—"Let us endeavour so to live that when we come to die, even the undertaker will be sorry."

Ottawa Report
By Patrick Nicholson

Canada's woolen textile industry is greeting with muted cheers the prospect of greater tariff protection against imported British fabrics. Those cheers are premature and selfish.

If the government does ultimately decide to increase the tariff on British textiles, which at present seems less than probable, Canada and Canadians will lose more than our undoubtedly hard-pressed woolen mills will gain.

If you are a man, your suit will cost you perhaps $5 more. If you are engaged in the salmon-fishing or salmon-canning industry, you will almost certainly find part of the pack accumulating unsold. If you are interested in the wood product industries, you may find your exports of newsprint and lumber to Britain curtailed. And no matter who or what you are, you will live to deplore what will be Canada's first step on the road back from our hope-bringing dream of freer world trade.

The Finance Minister, Mr. Abbott, has requested the Tariff Board in Ottawa to survey the Canadian woolen industry. Specifically, the Board will study the supply of Canadian wool fabrics, the domestic demand for all such materials, and the effect upon our industry of imports of British wools, wools, serge and similar fabrics.

Mr. Abbott's instructions were inspired largely by an active lobby on behalf of our woolen mills, which have suffered appreciable unemployment and short time recently.

Higher Tariff Urged

This lobby, whose most vocal spokesman in Ottawa is the Liberal member of Parliament for the Ontario textile centre of Waterloo South, Art White, is especially outraged by a clause in the tariff on British imports. This clause provides that the duty on British woven fabrics of wool shall be 20% on the value plus 12 cents per pound, subject to a maximum of 50 cents per pound. This rather unusual formula was proposed in 1932 to the then Prime Minister, Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, by a prominent Ottawa tailor, Mr. Gerald Preston. His objective was to devise a tariff which would help Canadian mills against low priced British fabrics without imposing a stiff duty on the higher priced British suitings which have no competitors among the less high grade Canadian fabrics.

Six years ago, Canada reaffirmed this tariff rate with the 50 cent maximum. Critics now suggest that it is unrealistic on account of the general increase in price levels. They would like to see the 50 cent maximum raised to at least $1. The average three-piece man's suit requires nearly four yards of material, weighing perhaps 13 ounces per yard. The boost in tariff would add just over $2 to the wholesale cost of that material, which would become $5 at the retail level. This higher cost of the better quality British tweeds and worsteds would not help Canadian mills, because their product is not competitive.

Effect of Higher Duty

However, the tariff increase may cut severely into Britain's sales to Canada of lower price fabrics. Woolen goods together earn Britain about $70 million per year in Canada, making them Britain's most important single export to Canada. A reduction in these exports would have the direct effect of reducing the number of Canadian dollars available to Britain to spend on Canadian goods. Thus the higher tariff might restore some employment in our textile industry, but it would automatically create unemployment in some of our export industries, such as salmon-packing, lumber and newspaper.

Even more important, this step would retard the advent of convertibility of the British Pound, and it would remove Canada from its praiseworthy pedestal as the world's leading exponent of lessened tariff barriers to free trade.

The textile industry is sick; a better nostrum might be to cure the sickness internally rather than to export sickness to other industries.

Gov. General To Plant Tree Marking Anglican Cathedral's Anniversary

QUEBEC (CP)—Canada's first Anglican cathedral, built by an enterprising English bishop 150 years ago in the heart of French Canada's historic capital, will be the centre of elaborate ceremonies this month.

The cathedral is a copy of St. Martin-in-the-Fields church in Trafalgar square, London.

Bishop Mountain obtained the site after the chapel was destroyed by fire in 1796 and pressed the home country for funds to erect the cathedral.

The commemorative ceremonies were organized by Rev. R. L. Seaborn, dean of the cathedral. Archbishop Phillip Carrington of Quebec will deliver a sermon.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Crowfoot, rector of the University of Bishop's College of Lennoxville, Quebec, will preach at a special service October 24.

Canada's primate will preach during the closing commemorative service October 31.

An historical exhibition is planned for the week of October 24-31. It was on Aug. 4, 1804 that Jacob Mountain, first bishop of Quebec, consecrated the stone church built at a cost of £80,000 by its patron, King George III of England.

Air Map

In the event of atomic war, enemy bombers could fly across the top of the world to strike at Canadian cities. This map shows the distances between bases in Northern Russia and such cities as Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg and Montreal. Radar and communications networks like the Lincoln and Pinetree lines and the McGill Fence would give warning. But in the event of an attack, civil defence would come into play. At civil defence headquarters in Ottawa and at various government levels across the country men are planning what can be done to prepare for such an attack. — (CP Photo).

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

Believe it or not, but 3,600,000 acres of land in Africa were swallowed in the past two years by shifting sands howling sand storms coming out of the great Sahara Desert.

This alarming condition stems from the wholesale removal of trees cover by the natives of North-Central African regions.

The march of the gigantic dust bowl has penetrated the northern Gold Coast and Northern Nigeria. Farther east, the changing sands of the Sahara are flowing from the Sudan into Belgian Congo and into Uganda and Kenya.

This is but one example of what can happen to a country when man interferes with the law of nature, and should be a warning to our farmers in the Prairie Provinces who, in recent years, have been felling great belts of woodland in Alberta in order to bring more acres under cultivation.

If you would like to avoid paying income taxes take a cue from 92-year-old Earl E. Dudding of Washington, who, in 40 years of working has never coughed up a single penny for the income tax people. Why? Well, because Dudding, as the founder and president of the Prisoner's Relief Society receives no salary, so he owes no income taxes.

Dudding spent four years in prison at Moundsville, W. Va., for shooting a man. Upon release he founded the Prisoner Relief Society so that prisoners released from prison could come to the farm for a physical build up before being sent to work in remote places.

For every man who reaches 85 there are seven women. It's a little late then, however.

Always remember you can't give the other fellow a push without going in the same direction yourself.

Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia, issued a 20-day stay of execution for Henry Green, convicted murderer, so that he could recover from an operation to be put to death by the state. Strange but true.

The police of our cities often are called on to give first class service such as watching baby carriages while the mothers go off on a shopping spree, leading tiny tots across dangerous street corners, and trying the doors of business establishments to see whether their owners have locked them against thieves. That's all routine to the police in almost every city across the nation. But when Mrs. H. E. Smith of Montreal recently phoned police for help and told them she had left a pot of stew on the kitchen range and that she'd been obliged if they'd pick up her key and turn the stuff while she went down town that was a brand new idea.

A rutted road that runs through Fairfax, Va., is not going to be paved. Why? Because residents along the road petitioned the county board of supervisors to leave the road as is. They said since they lived in the country they wanted their road to stay country.

Barber, who was 66 when he passed away in New York City last June, appended a codicil to his will three months before his death, sliced 12 1/2 per cent from his widow's share in the $7,000,000 estate and designated it Elena "my friend."

Strange But True
By F. H. MacArthur

Believe it or not, but 3,600,000 acres of land in Africa were swallowed in the past two years by shifting sands howling sand storms coming out of the great Sahara Desert.

This alarming condition stems from the wholesale removal of trees cover by the natives of North-Central African regions.

The march of the gigantic dust bowl has penetrated the northern Gold Coast and Northern Nigeria. Farther east, the changing sands of the Sahara are flowing from the Sudan into Belgian Congo and into Uganda and Kenya.

This is but one example of what can happen to a country when man interferes with the law of nature, and should be a warning to our farmers in the Prairie Provinces who, in recent years, have been felling great belts of woodland in Alberta in order to bring more acres under cultivation.

If you would like to avoid paying income taxes take a cue from 92-year-old Earl E. Dudding of Washington, who, in 40 years of working has never coughed up a single penny for the income tax people. Why? Well, because Dudding, as the founder and president of the Prisoner's Relief Society receives no salary, so he owes no income taxes.

Dudding spent four years in prison at Moundsville, W. Va., for shooting a man. Upon release he founded the Prisoner Relief Society so that prisoners released from prison could come to the farm for a physical build up before being sent to work in remote places.

For every man who reaches 85 there are seven women. It's a little late then, however.

An old phonograph record album is handy on a desk. Use the pockets for stationery, carbon paper, bills, and the like.

Always remember you can't give the other fellow a push without going in the same direction yourself.

Governor Herman Talmadge of Georgia, issued a 20-day stay of execution for Henry Green, convicted murderer, so that he could recover from an operation to be put to death by the state. Strange but true.

The police of our cities often are called on to give first class service such as watching baby carriages while the mothers go off on a shopping spree, leading tiny tots across dangerous street corners, and trying the doors of business establishments to see whether their owners have locked them against thieves. That's all routine to the police in almost every city across the nation. But when Mrs. H. E. Smith of Montreal recently phoned police for help and told them she had left a pot of stew on the kitchen range and that she'd been obliged if they'd pick up her key and turn the stuff while she went down town that was a brand new idea.

A rutted road that runs through Fairfax, Va., is not going to be paved. Why? Because residents along the road petitioned the county board of supervisors to leave the road as is. They said since they lived in the country they wanted their road to stay country.
