FOUR CANADIANS

In the Goethestrass in Hannover's red-light district. The Canadians said, however, that their own casualties were "only a few black eyes."

The troops are from Canada's 27th Infantry Brigade, which arrived in Germany last November to take place in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization defense forces. They had finished manoeuvres in Leunenburg Health last week.

Although German newspapers used the word "riots" to describe the week-end events, Maj. Alex Striton, public-relations officer with the Canadian brigade, said reports of the affair were exaggerated.

German police estimated to-night that 30 Canadians were involved in the fracas, although earlier reports had the number as high as 70.

Striton said there were several disturbances involving Canadians Saturday night. One occurred near a servicemen's canteen and the other near a Jewish cemetery. These were quickly ended.

The big fuss happened outside the beer hall. Just what sparked the brawl is hazy. With the troops back from their exercises, the Canadians had special patrols out ready for trouble. The four arrested Canadians were turned over to the Canadian patrols by the German police.

One report was that the fighting started when a policeman tried to check the passes of soldiers drinking in the beer hall. The inkeeper called a German riot squad as the fighting spread outside the saloon.

Losses due to theft from defence establishments during the last two years totalled only $85,809. Theft incidence among the civilian population was 23 per cent in that period while among servicemen it was 20 per cent.

Gulf Operation Of Dragger Is Found Feasible

The result of the investigation carried out last week in dragger operations in the Gulf of St. Lawrence clearly proves that the Island-owned dragger can go out and get paying catches as soon as the ice leaves, states Mr. Eugene Gorman, director of fisheries in the Department of Industry and Natural Resources.

The experimental trip was made in the dragger "Marjorie and Mary Bell" under Francis Campbell. During the week-long investigation practically the whole of the Gulf was gone over.

The first drag was made in water 100 fathoms deep with a temperature of slightly over 32 degrees Fahrenheit. The catch was 1,200 lbs., consisting of cod, hake, some haddock, a few shrimps, and grey sole which is the finest edible flounder.

Thursday evening in water of about similar temperature and depth, the boat took another catch of 1,000 lbs. The third catch, made in water closely approaching 40 degrees, and 100 fathoms deep, resulted in a catch of 2,500 lbs. In all, five drags were made in widely scattered areas but in areas which first had been scientifically selected from the chart and after the temperature at the bottom had been taken.

The instrument for registering the temperature is a brass thermometer which is dropped to the bottom by a string wire. After it has been pulled to the surface, a sufficient time to register accurately, a small brass block is dropped on top of the instrument by the same wire. This block, hitting the top of the thermometer, disconnects it so that the temperature reading remains constant while being pulled to the surface.

Mr. Gorman stated that Island dragger operators will be supplied with the necessary detailed information which will prevent any guess work in their operations.

Peron Would Woo South Americans From the U. S. A.

BUENOS AIRES, May 19 — (AP) — Argentina's President Juan D. Peron has embarked on a vigorous campaign to woo South Americans away from the United States.

His long-range dream is to form a united federation of all countries on that continent to take a "third position" stand under Argentine leadership in the East-West struggle.

For the moment, at least, Peron has a big advantage in his fight since the U.S. has become embroiled in unpleasant economic disputes with three important Latin-American countries. These countries — Bolivia, Chile and Peru — might easily fall or be pushed into Peron's orbit.

The most dramatic example in the influence tug-of-war was in Bolivia. After a six-months dispute over the price the U.S. should pay for Bolivia's tin, the weak military government there fell to the nationalist revolutionary movement in the bloody uprising of April 9-11.

The revolutionary party, backed by the country's miners, probably could have toppled the army-officers government in any case but the U.S. got a big share of the blame. Argentina quickly followed Spain and Guatemala in recognizing the new government of Victor Paz Estenssoro.

The big Eva Peron Foundation, a welfare organization run by the Argentine President's wife, rushed plane-loads of medicine and food to the stricken population in Bolivia when the revolt was over.

In Chile, face with a close presidential election Aug. 4, President Gabriel Gonzalez Videla cancelled a contract to sell 80 per cent of the country's copper to the U.S. at a fixed price. Although friendly to the U.S., Gonzales Videla was compelled by economic and political pressure to take this step. He demanded more than the 27 cents a pound the U.S. had been paying for copper.

The copper price situation was made to order for anti-U.S. elements. It is being used effectively by Carlos Ibáñez Del Campo, seeking the presidency against his opponents' charges that he was hand-picked by Peron — a charge his supporters deny.

Another top threat to U.S. prestige is in Peru where nearly the whole country has bitterly denounced Washington's plan to impose high tariffs on imports of Peruvian tuna fish.

Brazil, the biggest and most populous country in South America, has drawn closer to Peron since Getulio Vargas resumed the presidency last year. But since Argentina's 1961 crop failure, Vargas has had to buy his wheat elsewhere and trade between the two Latin-American countries is lagging.

Citizenship Council Holds Annual Meeting

The Canadian Citizenship Council combined its annual meeting with a luncheon at the Charlottetown Hotel yesterday at 1 p.m. There were two absentees, Mrs. J. Walter Jones who accompanied the Premier on a business trip to Ontario, and Mrs. J. Putnam who is visiting in Montreal.

Reports were read by the President, Mrs. J. B. Murley, the Secretary, Mrs. J. T. Davis and the Treasurer, Mrs. Emma Bruce. Mrs. W. J. P. MacMillan spoke about the year's work and voiced her appreciation of the Council's work in the eyes of the public. Other speakers including Miss Iphigenie Arsenault of the Red Cross, spoke in a similar vein, and all pleased to see such organizations as the Board of Trade, the Rotary Club, The Catholic Women's League, Women's Institute and the I.O.D.E. contributing money and assistance, to help carry on the work of the Council.

Appreciation was expressed of the help given by the Hon. O. C. Baker and the Department of Agriculture in making the annual Christmas party such a success.

Mayor Stewart and the City Council were also referred to in grateful terms, and it was recalled that his worship and some members of his Council had attended recent new Canadian parties.

Several speakers noted that more and more people are arriving in the Province from Europe, and affirmed that as this trend continues, the work of the Citizenship Council will grow also.

Members of the council felt it was significant that various public bodies are now recognizing the council, as making an important contribution to community welfare, and are endorsing its work with offers of practical help.

The Council accepted the invitation of the Women's Institute to attend that body's annual convention in July. Mrs. J. B. Murley was named as representative.

In her secretarial report, Mrs. J. T. Davis stated that four council meetings were held during the year, and that the new Canadians were entertained at parties on three occasions. Special mention was made of the Christmas party which was sponsored by the Provincial Government, City of Charlottetown, Catholic Women's League, and the I.O.D.E. The report pointed out that the Immigration Department in Halifax, had three representatives at the Christmas party and most recently presented at the most recent party on May 12. This the secretary believed was an indication of the importance attached to the activities of the Council. The treasurer's report read by Mrs. Emma Bruce, revealed a small cash balance.

Following is the slate of officers for the ensuing year — President: Mrs. J. B. Murley; vice-president, Mrs. S. G. Peppin; secretary, Mrs. J. T. Davis; treasurer, Mrs. Emma Bruce.

Executive: Mrs. J. Walter Jones, Mrs. W. J. P. MacMillan, Mrs. Farnell MacMahon, Miss Iphigenie Arsenault, Mrs. A. G. Putnam, Miss Mary Robin.

The meeting went on record as appreciative of the publicity given by the press during the year.

Stresses Importance Of Atlantic Fisheries

HALIFAX, May 17 — "North Atlantic fisheries are the backbone of a great future industry," E. A. Day, Montreal and Ottawa, special representative of fisheries for the system, Canadian National Railways, said here today.

"Scope of our fisheries are such as to place the provinces of the North Atlantic in the forefront of continuing production of protein foods," Mr. Day said. "It could very well prove to be one of our richest heritages." This great, partly submerged sea platform which juts out into the North Atlantic, he said, extended from the Georges to the end of the Grand Banks, it included Halifax, Canada, Lunenburg and the landing points of Newfoundland.

"Even the early preliminary researches that have been made of our Atlantic fisheries," said Mr. Day, "clearly point to the growing importance of the industry and its great potential economic value."

Mr. Day, accompanied by W. H. Cyr, Montreal, assistant engineer of research and development for the company, is here to discuss new developments in the fisheries industry with heads of local firms and to inspect the company's fish handling methods in the Maritimes.

Iceland Turns Down U. K. Request

LONDON, May 19 — (Reuters) — The Icelandic Government has turned down Britain's request to drop the new ban on foreign vessels fishing in waters around the Iceland coast, Selwyn Lloyd, minister of state and foreign affairs, said today.

He told the Commons Iceland's restrictions are almost as serious to Britain as similar regulations issued recently by Norway.

"The government did make very strong verbal and written representations to the Icelandic Government not to take this course," Lloyd said. "We shall certainly seek to preserve the rights of our people in any legitimate manner. We are now seeking the best way to achieve that object."

New Methods Of Extracting Metals Revealed

NEW YORK, May 17 — (AP) — New ways of extracting copper, nickel, cobalt and other important metals from ores by chemical rather than the usual smelting and refining methods were announced recently by Chemical Construction Corp.

Major-Gen. William N. Porter, president, described the process as "basically new and revolutionary" and said they are the result of seven years of research by the company, a subsidiary of American Cyanamid Co., and four years of research and pilot plant work by Sherritt Gordon Mines, Ltd., a Canadian nickel producer.

"Compared with conventional methods," he said, "our piloting experience has shown that production cost, from ore concentration to pure metals, should be considerably below current costs."

Other savings may be achieved by trimming transportation and personnel costs and by reducing the time lag between mining and pure metal "from months to a matter of hours," he said.
