

Tattered Survivors Safe After Quest For Treasure

DARWIN, Australia (Reuters)—Six tattered survivors of an ill-fated quest for sunken treasure reached here Tuesday with an account of shipwreck and a struggle for survival on a tropical island. The six, including James Burke, 32, of Vancouver, were part of the crew of the vessel Goldseeker, which sailed from Scotland last year bent on winning a reputed fortune in gold lying in the wreck of a Boston Clipper which went down in New Zealand waters in 1886.

The Goldseeker foundered on Portuguese Timor a month ago after her engines broke down. The Australian skipper, W. J. Haver, set out on foot with native guides to bring help. But the crew members who remained with the hulk grew anxious and eventually shipped a 16-foot sail-rigged lifeboat and set sail across the Timor Sea. For 10 days they were hammered by monsoon gales. Hurling ashore on lonely Bathurst Island the party struggled for existence without food before they were found and brought here by the Australian naval survey ship Emu.

Burke and the two other survivors, suffering from severe exposure, malnutrition and suspected internal injuries, were brought ashore on stretchers. The other three also were "in bad shape."

Besides Burke they are: Verity Gill, 23, of Singapore; Allan Addison, 24, of Hamilton, New Zealand, and his brother Robin, Chong San Yapp, 31, seaman of Kuala Lumpur, Malaya, and Arthur Danaher, 32, of Ireland. "We became destitute soon after the skipper left and decided to make a run for it in a dinghy," Gill said. "The only food we had was a pig, 30 coconuts and bunches of bananas." Burke was the only seaman aboard. Eventually they saw a light. "We thought that if it was a lighthouse, there must be a keeper so we cheered up and ate more than we should of our remaining food. We were not to know it was an unmanned beacon on Bathurst Island. "We hit rocks heavily and were all through out and had to swim for it. Fortunately all got ashore in spite of injuries." Gill said after three days on the island most of them were sick from hunger. "We were on our way to get some sea snails (Monday) when we heard a human shout. It was Jack Jensen (a local miner) and another man. They had found our tracks and followed them."
