POETRY.

A FRAGMENT.
BY ELIZA COOKE.

The debt of gratitude
Is not the best remember'd where the lips Four forth their voluble and fluent tide Of warm acknowledgment. Fair spoken phrases, Graced with a courtier's bow, are pleasant things, But rarely hold much more of grateful truth Than the bright slime that cunning reptiles spread To catch their prey—and they who often tear In fierce recoil upon the helping hand, Are oftentimes whose hollow hearts have sworn A changeless sense of benefits received.
The breast where Gratitude is firm and deep Gives least expression to the one it serves; As trees that bear the heaviest of fruit Yield the least rustling to the cherishing breeze, Prayer has its declavage and well sent chant To say or sing, but prayer can offer up A purer tribute to the mighty One Who rules the thunder and restrains the waves Than ever cloistered walls responded to.
The lonely orphan child, who steals at night Where the round moon shines on a mother's grave Knows little how to mould his trusting faith In proper sentences; but the dim eye That sheds its blinding tear upon the turf, And then looks up to the fair silver stars, Carries a ray of holy fervency That will not be rejected at the throne Of Him who suits the wind to the shorn lamb.
The erring one, whose right arm has been strong In working evil, may repent, "and save His soul alive." He cannot frame his thoughts In saintly code—but the pale, saddened brow That drops in silence, penitence and shame, Shall plead for him at the eternal bar Where boundless mercy fills the judgment seat.

A TALK WITH A YOUNG MAN.

Young man, a word with you!
You have been attending school for several years, and if you have improved your time have acquired a fair English education. Your parents have been at much expense in rearing you to your present years and stature. They naturally feel much anxiety to know what is to result from all their labor and outlay in your behalf. Now, that you are fifteen or sixteen years old, they naturally think it is time they should know what you are good for.

Young friend! show those good parents of yours that you are good for something.
How is that to be done? you ask.

If you have ever had any notion that you would make your way in life without work, get rid of the foolish idea immediately. Resolve that you will make yourself master of a good trade.

Don't look for a "situation." It is only skillful in some trade, art or business, is "master of the situation." Many a young man has been ruined by waiting for a "situation" or an opening.

Think over the long list of useful and profitable trades, and study to know which is the best suited to your tastes and abilities. Talk with father and mother on the subject. Their longer experience in the world, and their affection for you will cause their advice to be invaluable to you.

Having carefully come to a conclusion as to what trade is best for you, proceed to learn it by going into some shop or manufacture where your chosen art is thoroughly understood and successfully practised.

Don't expect to make money at first.
The trade you acquire will be worth more than money. As soon as your services are worth more than the trouble of teaching you and the value of the material you spoil, you may expect to make some money.

Apply yourself diligently and attentively to your business, and in the course of no long time you will find yourself master of a trade. Possessed of a trade, a poor man is independent at the outset, and if industrious, economical and prudent will become rich in a few years.

Our industry is not given to the poor young man alone. If a boy has a fortune in property, he should learn some branch of honest industry in which he may profitably and usefully employ his capital when it comes to him. In the mutations of human affairs his fortune may fly from him, and in such a case the trade acquired in youth would be a good thing to fall back upon.

Young Peter, of Russia, was heir to an Empire with all its vast resources, but he wisely applied himself to the work of learning the art of shipbuilding. He was a better, a wiser, and a happier king, because he was a ship carpenter.

We have known the sons of wealthy fathers to serve a faithful and industrious apprenticeship to a trade. Early and late day by day, they have applied themselves to their mechanical toil. Such young men show themselves capable of useful and enduring superstructures on the foundations of wealth and influence laid by their fathers.

Go thou and do likewise.

IN SELF-DEFENCE.

"Halt! Your money or your life. Throw up your hands!" exclaimed a stranger, stepping out from the shadow, while accompanying the words might plainly be heard the sharp click of a pistol. The person addressed was a we're newspaper man wending his lonely way home and in the outskirts of the city at about 3 o'clock the other morning.

"Oh, yes, certainly. I'm in no hurry.
Only walking for exercise. Just as soon hold up my hand as not. I'm not armed.
Please turn that a little to one side. It makes me nervous."

"Haven't you any red with me. You see they took that all away from me when they entered my name on the books."
"Where did they take your money from you?"

"No thank you," said the robber, baking away at a round toward the other side. "I couldn't take anything from a man so unfortunate as you are. Here.
There's half a dollar for you, poor fellow.
Go get something to drink," and he threw the coin towards him, still backing off.

"Now," said he, "you turn back and go around the block the other way. As you're only walking for exercise, it won't incommode you."

"Oh! not a particle. I'd just as soon walk with you if you desire it. Either way though it's all the same to me. Thank you for the half dollar. Won't you join me and drink to my recovery?"

"Well, you go round the block the other way, and as I haven't hurt you, say nothing about having met me. I guess I'll go this way," and then watching till the supposed small-pox patient turned the corner, he started off on a full run in the opposite direction.

Mr. newspaper man proceeded on homeward undisturbed, and slept the sleep of one who enjoys the consciousness of having done a good thing, and four bits better off for having met a highwayman.

THE DEFECTIVE STONE.

"Don't put in that stone," said one mason to another, as they were working together on the rear wall of a church.

"Can't you see its poor quality, all flaky, and will scale away to pieces?" "It isn't very good grain, I see, but it fits in here, and I don't want to wait for another. Besides, you can't see it from the ground, and nobody will take the trouble to climb up here to look at it."

"You'd better send for another block. That isn't fit for the wall; it won't stand the weather; and if it should go to pieces, it will damage the whole building." "I guess it won't damage me, or you either, so here goes." And he lifted the block of loose grained, flaky freestone into its bed, though the outer thickness cracked and the shell sloughed off. He dashed over it a trowel full of mortar, and went on with the next tier.

Nobody could see the defective stone, for it was covered by projecting buttress, and only the two stone masons were present when it was laid. But though unseen it was not safe, and time brought about its own result.—Every sunbeam loosened its texture a little, every storm helped to crumble off a minute fragment, and little by little, after many years, the stone crumbled away. That was bad enough, but that was not all. It chanced that one of the great beams of the roof rested a few feet above, directly over the defective block, and as the stone decayed, the beam sank a little. Presently a crack opened in the ceiling, disfiguring the fresco painting, and the crack grew to a leak, letting in the rain. And when at last the worthless block fell out, the beam dropped down, the roof sunk in, and the church was no longer fit for use, until after the loss of much time and the expense of much money, a new roof was built and a new block inserted in the wall. It was only a small defect, but it did much damage in the end.

There is a structure which everybody is building, young and old, each one for himself, it is called character, and in it every act of life is a stone. It day by day we are careful to build our lives with pure, noble, upright deeds, at the end will stand a fair temple, honored of God and man.
But, as one leak will sink a ship, and one flaw break a chain, some one mean, dishonorable, untruthful act or word, will forever leave its impress or work its influence on our characters. Then let the several deeds unite to form a perfect day, and one by one the days grow into noble years, and the years, as they slowly pass, will raise at last a beautiful edifice, enduring forever to our praise.

British Investments all over the World.

The national debt of Great Britain represents a total of £797,000,000. Then the Indian and Colonial loans represent about £200,000,000; Indian guaranteed railways and canals, and other colonial railway stock, £110,000,000; and British railways and canals, some £525,000,000—canals to the extent of about £13,000,000 being included in the Board of Trade statistics.
