

GENERAL KMETZ and GENERAL WILLIAMS—General Kmetz, late in the Hungarian and Turkish services, has addressed, from the latter, a letter to General Williams, of which the following is a copy:—

"Sir,—No one can better appreciate than myself the services which you rendered at Erzeroum and Kars.

On leaving the services called forth the plaudits of your country, without allusion to the services which it was in my power to render during the same campaigns, I felt in no way disposed to break the reserve which I have to make to my subjects. But, now that I see by the newspapers, that you alluded to you in public, I feel it a duty to my own military reputation to make some remarks.

On your arrival at Kars, in the autumn of 1854, you relieved me from the outpost duties, which had been entrusted to me with the irregular corps during nine months, without the intermission of a single day, and in which my strength and constitution had necessarily suffered severely. You placed me, at my request, in command of a division of the army, and you supported the exercise of my authority in that position, and the greater confidence you placed in me, as no other European officer ever enjoyed in this country. At length, when the word "surrender" was uttered for the first time, you enabled me to leave the beleaguered garrison with great boldness and success. For all this, my acknowledgments are due, and far be it from me to withhold them.

Now, however, a new aspect is given to our mutual relations by one of your publications, in which you are represented as mentioning Colonel Lake, an engineer of great merit; the lamented captain Thompson, whose premature demise is by me, as by all, regretted; the young Major "Cecilia," whose valor and boldness give you the best promise; Mr. Churchill, a gentleman who doubtless rendered you important services in his functions of secretary; and, lastly, Mr. Sandwith, an able and indefatigable physician.

As these, I say, a well deserved meed of praise, you introduce my name, as if half-forgotten, and as if of one who had contributed but little to the success of the campaign.

Under these circumstances, I can no longer keep silence without losing my self respect, and I find myself, though most unwillingly, constrained to call upon you, with a view to the details of the complete statements of facts which have appeared, and more especially those concerning the battle of the 28th September, 1855, in which the part taken by me will no doubt come to light, and appear as you, as it does to me, imperfectly reported.

If I have not taken this course sooner, it is also partly because on perusing your despatches in the blue-book, I regarded with respect to the British command, and on one concerning his own services and those of other British officers, with which it was no business of mine to interfere. But it is only from another of your public speeches, in which you talk of the British army as being under your command, that I learn that these reports can be taken as those of the commander-in-chief of the army of Kars. As such, I hold that an officer serving in any army should not having the honour to be a British officer, has an incontrovertible right to come forward and require, that all chief questions relating to it should be placed in a distinct and accurate footing.

I have the honor to remain, sir, your very obedient humble servant.

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF MOUNT VERNON HOTEL.—On Friday night 5th inst, the Mount Vernon Hotel, at Cape May, New Jersey, was destroyed by fire. It was the largest hotel in the world. Five persons were burned to death. They were Mr. Cain, one of the proprietors, with his sons Andrew and Philip, one twenty, the other eight years of age, his two daughters, Martha, aged seventeen, and Sarah, aged thirteen, Mrs. Albertson, the house-keeper, aged thirty-five. The cool weather had depopulated the hotel of its summer guests, and only about a dozen remained in the building. They slept on the second floor, and the fire breaking out in the lower story, their egress from the building was cut off, and they were all consumed in the flames. The fire commenced at eleven o'clock at night, and by one o'clock, the building, with nearly all its contents, was consumed. The building was entirely of wood, and raised on piles driven into the sand. Upon the ground beneath the first floor, the shavings and strips which had accumulated while the building had been left. The fire it is supposed, was kindled by a cigar thrown near the grate, and the fire took but a short time to spread over such inflammable materials as composed the building. The wind blew blazing embers and light shingles to a great distance, and kindled other houses on the Island was injured. This calamity should awaken serious consideration in reference to the dangers incurred at most of the watering places, owing to the hotels being entirely of wood. At Cape May, all the largest houses are constructed of this combustible material, and yet some of them have sleeping apartments four and five stories from the ground. Should a fire occur, when one of these numerous piles of wood is crowded with boarders, what would be the chance of escape? Even so vast a structure as the Mount Vernon was burned down within two hours. Any other would be equally liable to destruction, if not in a single hour. Some of the hotels have a staircase running, down outside of the building. Others in default of this keep each story numerously supplied with buckets, and have fire engines, but the latter are but small aids in case of such a conflagration as which annihilated the Mount Vernon. Something more is needed to assure our citizens, that the hotels of a pleasure place shall not become funeral piles.

DEATH OF DR. BUCKLAND.—The Rev. Dr. Buckland, Dean of Westminster, but better and more widely known from his works on the science of geology, died at his residence in the city of London, on the 14th instant. Unhappily, the intellectual death of Dr. Buckland dates, not from the year 1855, but from some six or seven years ago, since which time a cloud has come over his mind, and he has been in a state of confinement in the evening of life. He was born at Axminster, in the year 1784, and received his early education at Winchester School, whence he removed to Oxford in 1804, and after being a member of Balliol, and was elected Fellow of his College in 1808. In 1813 he was appointed Reader in Mineralogy, and in 1818 Reader in Geology, to the University. In 1826 Dr. Buckland was elected into a fellowship accepting the living of Stoke Charity, near Whitechurch, Hants; in the same year he was promoted to a canonry in the Cathedral of Christ Church, and married Mary, the eldest daughter of Mr. Benjamin Mead, of Sheepstead-house, Abingdon. In 1856 he published his Brigdwater Treatise, entitled, "Geology and Mineralogy, considered with reference to Natural Theology." In 1848 Dr. Buckland was preferred by the late Sir Robert Peel to the Deanery of Westminster, vacated by the promotion of Dr. Samuel Wilberforce to the Episcopal bench.—Times.

THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON III. has just sent, as a gift to the Emperor Alexander, a splendid copy of the well-known religious work of Thomas Kempis, entitled "De Imitatione Christi," printed and bound in the imperial workshop. There is a special canon in this work, for the use of the Emperor, and some of the Emperor's precepts of humility and self-prostration are particularly recommended.

A letter from Stuttgart says:—"A novel branch of industry for this place is now in operation here—namely the fabrication of corsets, which in 1854 were valued at 1,000,000 florins, supplies annually 300,000 corsets, valued at from 500,000 to 600,000 florins."

THE ARRIVAL AT KARS, in the autumn of 1854, you relieved me from the outpost duties, which had been entrusted to me with the irregular corps during nine months, without the intermission of a single day, and in which my strength and constitution had necessarily suffered severely. You placed me, at my request, in command of a division of the army, and you supported the exercise of my authority in that position, and the greater confidence you placed in me, as no other European officer ever enjoyed in this country.
