He had reached the foot of the steps when Strang himself appeared in the doorway of the house and greeted him with a show of relief.

"Good for you!" he exclaimed. "I was beginning to think you'd got bushed and I'd have to carry on without you. Come inside for a minute, will you? I expect you know something of what's happened, but I can let you have the details and tell you how we usually deal with these things."

Thurlow said nothing to this but mounted the steps in silence and entered the house, followed by M'fani.

The trader waved him to a chair, and then turned to the girl. "You'd better clear out, M'fani," he told her. "I want to talk to Thurlow alone."

She had stopped just inside the doorway and was looking at him steadily, but she made no reply.

"Do you hear what I say?" Strang demanded impatiently. "Go to your room and stay there till this is over."

Instead of obeying, she moved forward steadily into the room and seated herself in a chair by the table.

"I stay here," she announced coldly. "I want to hear what you will tell Thurlow."

The trader looked at her blackly for a moment, and then shrugged. "All right," he growled. "Stay if you want to, but don't blame me if you don't like what you hear."

He turned to Thurlow. "The fact is that there was an attempt at murder here this afternoon, and we've got to deal with it," he announced briefly. "One of the plantation hands tried to knife an overseer and very nearly succeeded. After what I said last night, I needn't tell you how serious that kind of thing is. Luckily for us, it doesn't occur often, but when it does it means taking strong action. Porson believed — and I fully agree with him — that flogging is the only real deterrent. And the more impressive you make it, the more the lesson is likely to sink in to the others. So I've arranged to have all the menfolk up here to watch the proceedings, and if we get straight on with it, it'll be over in half-an-hour."

His manner was brisk and assured, and if anything had been needed to harden Thurlow's resolution, this semi-dictatorial attitude would have accomplished it. When he spoke, however, his voice betrayed no trace of his feelings.

"You seem to have planned it all pretty thoroughly," he said slowly. "So well, in fact, that I'm wondering what part I'm supposed to play in this."

Strang stared at him. "What part?" he echoed. "Well, that's a funny question! You're the Resident, aren't you?"

"Yes, I'm the Resident," Thurlow agreed. "But it seems to me that you've settled the whole thing in advance and there's nothing left for me to do."

The trader laughed, a trifle impatiently. "Oh, I see what you mean," he said. "Well, I have in a

Day After Tomorrow

GO after the things you want with determination this day, but be sure that your plans are basically sound. If there is the slightest doubt in your mind, consult an expert and follow his advice. Once positive that you are on the right track, go ahead and do not allow yourself to be swayed by those whose motives are open to question.

Social affairs will not particularly interest you this day, since your main happiness will arise from complete absorption in the tasks at hand, but should you seek relaxation at day's end, pleasures shared with congenial companions are under a most benign aspect.

If It Is Your Birthday

If Monday is your birthday, the next few months should prove most satisfactory from every point of view. Your horoscope indicates business success and financial prosperity, possible promotion through the good will of superiors and the possibility of some unusual recognition for past endeavors.

Travel is favored during mid-summer and early Fall and domestic and romantic matters are under extremely beneficial aspect. During November, be alert to clever and original ideas, since year's end does not mean the end of this prosperous period in your life. Keep looking ahead and plan for still greater expansion in 1954.

A child born on this day will be intelligent, versatile and a conscientious worker.

terbreeding, the farmer would be wise to survey the situation in consultation with leading fur stylists. There's simply no sense producing a color which won't elicit with the public, he believes.

The annual Russian fur auctions will be held in Leningrad July 27. Among the quantities to be offered are 750,000 squirrel, 100,000 kolinsky, 10,000 mink, 250,000 muskrat, 10,000 sable, 75,000 marmot, 200,000 grey hare, 400,000 raw black persian lamb, 30,000 grey persian lamb and dozens of other furs. The forests of Russia are ideal habitat for fur-bearing animals and the finest sable in the world and also the finest red fox come from the Kamchatka district.

The Canadian Fur Auction Sales Company (Quebec) Ltd. will hold their next fur auction in Montreal on June 3 and 4. Among the offerings are 600 blue fox, 10,000 red fox, 1,200 cross fox, 200,000 muskrat, 7,250 silver fox, 1,000 platinum fox, 750 pearl platinum, 500 white marked and 5,000 standard silvers.

way, of course, but there'll have to be some sort of a trial, and naturally you'll preside."

Thurlow nodded. "I see," he said. "I'm beginning to get the hang of it now. You do all the work and I get the credit for it. But it seems to me that you're a bit ahead of schedule, aren't you?"

"What do you mean?" the trader demanded.

PROCLAMATION Coronation Of The Queen JUNE 2nd, 1953

Following the proclamation of the federal government, and in conjunction with the said government, I hereby declare the second day of June, nineteen hundred and fifty-three, a civic holiday in the City of Charlottetown.

The day will mark an historic occasion, an event of both solemnity and rejoicing: The Coronation of Her Most Gracious Majesty, Elizabeth II.

In order that the citizens of Charlottetown may join with their fellow-citizens of Canada and the Commonwealth in celebrating the Coronation, appropriate civic and other ceremonies have been arranged. All citizens are invited to participate in the programme and to lend their efforts towards the end that this happy occasion may truly symbolize our loyalty to the Crown, our affection for the Queen and, at the same time, express our hope that her Reign may be long and glorious and that it will mark an era of great and enduring progress, of peace and prosperity for all peoples.

To lend festive colour to the day, it is appropriate that our homes, places of business, factories and offices be suitably decorated and that buildings remain illuminated throughout the evening.

It is my hope and desire that citizens of all faiths and all sections of the community will enter into the festive spirit of this occasion with full heart and with full understanding of its symbolic and underlying spiritual significance.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN!

Given under my hand and seal this twenty-ninth day of May in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and fifty-three.

J. DAVID STEWART,
Mayor of Charlottetown.
