

B.C. Timberman Sees No Threat From Soviet Union

VANCOUVER (CP) — Russia is not a contender for world lumber markets, in the opinion of a British Columbia forester just returned from an 8,000-mile tour of Russia's forest industry.

Angus McBean, chief forester for MacMillan and Bloedel Ltd., says Russia needs the bulk of its forest output for its own economy, most of it to rebuild in European lands where cities were devastated during the Second World War.

Mr. McBean, along with six other Canadian lumbermen, travelled from Archangel in the north to the Black Sea.

In return, a party of Russian timbermen now are in Canada on tour.

IMPROVING EFFICIENCY

Mr. McBean said the output per man hour in the Russian timber industry comes nowhere near Canadian standards but Russia is improving its level of efficiency rapidly.

"They are well behind Canadian standards. It is difficult to make a detailed comparison because their machinery is designed to suit their needs which are not the same as Canada's."

But because of Russia's huge labor force, their production exceeds Canada's by three-to-one except in the pulp industry. Canada's annual pulp production is 10,000,000 tons — Russia's is 2,200,000 tons.

Timber production compares as follows: Canada, 3,600,000,000; Russia, 11,000,000,000. Russia has 1,600,000,000 acres of timberland, Canada 530,000,000. Russia's forest labor force is about 1,000,000 men compared to 20,000 in Canada.

Mr. McBean said the vastness of the country gives Russia a problem in the transportation of oil and other raw materials needed in the forest industry. He said they are backward in their use of electrification.

Progress Of Campaign In Some U. S. Key States

(This is the second of a series of election campaign snapshots by AP political reporters who are surveying sentiment in key states across the U.S.)

IOWA

DES MOINES (AP)—The presidential campaign in Iowa—the heart of the politically important Corn Belt—is shaping up largely as a contest between the personal popularity of President Eisenhower and a dislike for his farm policies.

A lot of farmers—and they make up the unknown factor for the election—say they "like" the president but are dissatisfied with his farm program. This apparent paradox complicates the outlook for this traditionally Republican state.

Iowa is one of the few farm states in which farm income is down this year from last.

Supporters of Adlai Stevenson, the Democratic presidential nominee, concede that Eisenhower is popular throughout the state but they question the extent to which this will be reflected at the ballot box.

Republican leaders agree there is strong dissatisfaction among farmers but say there is not enough to give the state to Stevenson.

REPUBLICANS HOPEFUL

Eisenhower won Iowa by a majority of 357,000 out of 1,259,000 votes in 1952. Republican state chairman Don Pierson, while conceding the president will lose votes this year, predicts a victory margin of at least 100,000 votes.

But Jake More, the Democratic state chairman, said he sees great similarity between this campaign and the one in 1948 when Iowa—to surprise and consternation of Republicans—went for Harry S. Truman in his surprise victory over Thomas E. Dewey. Then, as now, there was dissatisfaction over Republican farm policies.

OKLAHOMA

KINGFISHER, Okla (AP)—Will A. Struck, who farms 480 acres of wheat land hard hit by drought, voted for Dwight D. Eisenhower for president in 1952. This time he will switch to the Democrats and Adlai E. Stevenson.

"My wheat crop," Struck said, "wasn't worth a damn. Haven't had a good crop around here since 1952. Between Ike and the dry weather they're going to bust us poor old farmers."

In 1952, Eisenhower carried this normally Democratic state by

CONWAY

215,048 votes to Stevenson's 480,582.

The Democrats are betting that the dry prairies and the hill country have enough discontented farmers to move Oklahoma's eight electoral votes over to Stevenson.

SAY EXAGGERATED

Republicans say the farm revolt is over-rated. Anyway, they're betting on big majorities in Oklahoma City and Tulsa, where Eisenhower four years ago rolled up a formidable 52,000-vote advantage.

Right now, you'd have to put Oklahoma down as doubtful with both sides running scared.

NEW JERSEY

TRENTON, N.J. (AP)—In New Jersey the Democrats are confident they can do better than last time. Four years ago Dwight D. Eisenhower defeated Adlai E. Stevenson by a 359,000 margin, representing more than 57 per cent of the total vote.

EXPECT REPEAT

On their part, the Republicans profess to see no reason why they shouldn't repeat. Today, employment and payroll figures are higher than in 1952. Farm policy is not a big issue here. No other questions seem to be agitating the whole state.

The state has had an estimated 14 per cent population increase since the last census, largely from migration. The Democrats believe they will reap the bigger crop in this new field of votes.

Democrats claim the "trend" is toward them. And they watch admiringly as the personable and energetic Gov. Robert Meyner—who is expected to seek re-election next year—gets out virtually every night to battle for the party. Meyner won the governorship by 160,000 votes just one year after Eisenhower's 52 victory. He was the first Democratic governor in 10 years.

BEDTIME STORIES

A Rude Awakening

The fact he is in vital need may justify another's deed.

—Old Mother Nature.

No one in all the Green Forest was more feared by the small folk who live there than is Hooty the Owl. All the Mouse folk shiver at the sound of his voice. Even Jump at the Hare, who is so very, very much bigger than any Mouse, shivers when he hears Hooty's hunting call. The sound of it in the night gives Blacky the Crow cold shivers too. In the daytime Blacky isn't afraid. He knows he is smart enough to keep out of Hooty's way, but in the darkness of night it's a very different matter.

They were making life very miserable for Hooty.

So it is that no one loves Hooty or any of the Owl cousins for that matter. Because Blacky and his friends have been frightened so many times in the night by try to get even with him. Sammy Jay, who is a sort of cousin Hooty they never miss a chance Blacky the Crow, had told Blacky where Hooty was watching a big hickory tree in the hope of catching one of the Squirrel cousins there. "He's sleepy," said Sammy. "He keeps dozing off. I watched him."

That was enough for Blacky. He gathered his flock around him and told them that if they followed him they would have some fun. Now the Crow folk are always ready to have some fun. Blacky led them over to the big hickory tree where the Squirrel cousins had been gathering nuts until Hooty had frightened them away. Right away Blacky's sharp eyes discovered Hooty in the top of a neighboring tree. The Crows all perched in other trees to watch until they were sure the big Owl was as sleepy as he looked. His big round eyes were closed. He was asleep. There was no doubt about that. At a signal from Blacky all the crows began flying around the tree in which Hooty was perched, screaming at the top of their lungs, and some of them flapping their wings in his very face.

Alone not one of those Crows would have dared be so bold. Together each seemed trying to show how brave he was. It was a rude awakening for the big Owl. His big round eyes flew right open. He snapped his bill angrily. It made an unpleasant sound. Blacky and his friends didn't mind that. They only cawed the louder. Blacky even dared to dive in and pull a feather from Hooty's coat. They were making life very miserable for Hooty.

Presently he flew back home to the darkest part of the Green Forest. The noisy gang followed him part way. Once or twice he swooped at one, but failed to catch one. It only made them shriek the louder. They were getting even. They were making life as miserable for Hooty as Hooty had so often made it miserable for them. There were having fun, that in the end would not pay. That kind of fun never does. They were just making Hooty more and more determined that sooner or later he would catch one of them.

They kept after him until they were very near that dark, lonesome part of the Green Forest that Hooty loves. Before they quite got there one by one gave up chasing him. You see, they knew that it might be that Mrs. Hooty was at home there. Two Owls at one time would be one too many. You see really those Crows were not brave. It was only when a number were together that they dared try to get even.
