

Those NORAD Briefings

What a Canadian Press writer describes as "one of the bizarre... of the election campaign" was the continued propagation of a pro-nuclear policy through the defense department after the resignation of Defence Minister Harkness.

Why was this? The CP story doesn't say, but one can guess. The briefings at Colorado Springs included the military viewpoint on the necessity for defensive nuclear warheads and the group visits to NORAD.

Thus, while Prime Minister Diefenbaker was saying on the hustings that Canada should not be made a "dumping ground" for nuclear warheads, and quoting U.S. Defense Secretary McNamara in support of his arguments, NORAD was giving visiting Canadians its viewpoint on the need for such warheads to be placed in Canada.

Busy with his own election campaign, Mr. Churchill was apparently unaware of what was going on. The trips to NORAD authorized by his predecessor included a visit of Canadian weekly newspaper editors, and the NORAD viewpoint got into a lot of weekly newspapers in Canada right in the middle of the election campaign.

An odd sight, indeed, on how election campaigns are fought!

Mr. Diefenbaker's Future

Commentators are now speculating on Mr. Diefenbaker's future. When his former defense minister, Mr. Harkness, expressed the view last week that a Conservative leadership convention is now in order, his words aroused many echoes in political circles.

It is recalled, however, that only two defeated Prime Ministers ever made political comebacks in Canada, and each had an impressive age advantage over Mr. Diefenbaker. Sir John A. Macdonald was 59 when he was defeated in the 1874 election. Mr. Mackenzie King was 51 when he was forced out briefly in 1926, and 55 when he was defeated by Mr. Bennett in 1930.

They also argue that he now heads a divided party. Conservative discontent in Ontario and Quebec was evident before the cabinet split of last February. The complaint was and is that under its present leadership the party has alienated the business community, lost traditionally Conservative ridings and disappointed support essential to victory.

is made out by those who believe that Mr. Diefenbaker will fight it again. It is obvious that he does not yield easily. He defeated the Conservative rebels last February and a new rebellion would almost certainly have to reckon with his strong prairie support.

It is predicted, too, that in any struggle within the party Mr. Diefenbaker would have another marked advantage. The role which the February rebels played in the losing of the election would come up for close scrutiny at a convention.

These are speculations, of course. The important thing is for the party to retain its drive and vigor as the Official Opposition in the next Parliament. Looking over the leadership prospects from this distance, it is hard to see anyone coming within a mile of Mr. Diefenbaker's qualifications.

Colonization Headache

Britain is facing a serious crisis in Central Africa. In compliance with anticolonial demands, she has agreed to the dissolution of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, thus freeing Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, which are governed by African majorities, from dependence on Southern Rhodesia, where the Constitution has preserved the white minority's control.

She has refused, however, to comply with an Assembly resolution calling for another constitution for Southern Rhodesia, maintaining that this is a matter for its inhabitants, who have had internal self-rule for years. Representatives of the special committee on colonial issues will go to London at the end of this month to discuss the situation with the British Government.

The demand for immediate independence for Southern Rhodesia has been presented by Winston Field, the extremist leader of the white settlers, who recently became Prime Minister. Britain's rejection of it is in line with the efforts Prime Minister Macmillan has made to accommodate his policy to what he has called the winds of change sweeping over Africa.

But now I am lonely as evening's first under a star. That shines on the earth from the heavens afar; And never again will my heart find repose. Till my footsteps return where the North River flows.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Women's Institute of Springfield is to be congratulated for producing a very attractive brochure on Lucy Maud Montgomery, "The Island's Lady of Stories." It contains, in brief form, a wealth of information about the authoress, her sources of inspiration and the settings in which her "Anne" stories were laid.

The new Royal Commission on Taxation held its first public hearing at Ottawa on Tuesday and heard, among other things, a prediction from the Canadian Tax Foundation that because government expenditures are growing faster than the economy, taxes likely will increase rather than decrease, and that this would occur particularly at the provincial and municipal level.

OTTAWA REPORT by Patrick Nicholson

Soothsayers, Horoscopes And Politics

Are you superstitious? What would you do, if you were the thirteenth prime minister of Canada; if you saw your Cabinet slashed to a mere thirteen ministers through resignations and electoral defeats; and if you then on the thirteenth day of the month...

WHAT STARS FORETELL Then, if your birthday falls on 18th September as was the birthday of Canada's 13th prime minister, the astrologers...

There's a place in my homeland, I'm longing to see. A place of fond memories, endearing to me. 'Tis a land of enchantment, when gay summer throes Her garlands about where the North River flows.

Then I'll meet the dear friends that I've lost for a while. And feel the true warmth of their welcoming smile. For old times are best friends as everyone knows. In that beautiful Vale where the North River flows.

Our Yesterday's

More than $6,300 damage was caused to the Charlottetown harbor front Monday when a large pan of ice dotted with bushes was swept from West Pier, when before a swift-running tide. A considerable portion of the head of Conroy's wharf was carried away by the ice.

Defeat and resignation took its toll of those first Conservative Ministers to be sworn in since Earl Rowe took oath on August 30, 1935. Although still a MP at that date 22 years later, he, the only ex-minister among Conservative MPs, was not invited to the new cabinet.

These are words which would predict this for your resignation date in 1983: "Today the emphasis is on your need to clean house, to clear away details; to finish putting out the debris. This means emotional as well as actual clutter."

From that coincidence about the recurring number thirteen, I'm going to see, and the lone woman - who were appointed to the cabinet...

Find Ruins Of Pharos

Smaller statues in the Pharos supposedly included a rotating figure that followed the sun's course with a pointing finger and another that musically sounded the hours.

BEACON WAS NEEDED

The Pharos was completed about 280 B.C. in the region of Ptolemy II, or Philadelphus. This enlightened ruler of Egypt made the Pharos a center of science and scholarship. The city also was a major port, and a beacon was needed to guide ships to Egypt's low-lying coast and past the shoals outside Alexandria harbor.

NAMED JAILER

LONDON (AP)—Queen Elizabeth Tuesday approved the appointment of her brother-in-law Lord Snowdon, as constable of Caerwynn Castle, Wales. Five hundred years ago the former professional photographer, Antwerp-born Snowdon, who has been the jailer at the ancient castle. Nowadays, the constable plays a leading role in receiving members of the royal family on visits.

Embarassing Anniversary

By Harold Morrison Canadian Press Staff Writer

It appears to have developed a split between Kennedy and the exiles. Now there are reports that Castro is still very much in control; that he has participated in a game that he has been invited to Moscow to confer with Soviet leaders.
