DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it:
A X Y D L B A A X E is LONG FELLOW

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

"WITNESSES" IN GERMANY
BERLIN, March 21 — (Reuters) — East-German police have arrested two preachers of the Jehovah's Witnesses sect, while two other preachers have had their ration cards withdrawn, a Berlin spokesman of the sect said today. Meetings of the sect had also been broken up at several places in Eastern Germany, he added.

BOTH OVER 21

By Samuel Hopkins Adams

"Certainly, certainly," he replied with nervous geniality. "You're looking swell, Miss McCabe. Seen Mr. Kane lately?"

"No. Will you sell me that film?"

"The Wondertrip? Why, pleased to know you liked it that much."

"I hate it. Will you sell it to me?"

"It's Lex-Lohegrin property."

"Are you going to show it any more?"

"We might or we might not. It went over pretty good today. It'd have been a better film if you'd shown more cooperation while I was trying to get it. I'll see what can be done."

"Oh, please! I'll pay anything for it," said Maida recklessly.

He shot a quick appraising look at her. "You must have married that rich young fella. What was his name? Waring, huh?"

"I didn't. I'm not going to."

Mr. Metzger active mind made a jump, misinterpreting the strain and pain in the young face. "Don't tell me that our film gummed the game with him," said he contritely.

"No."

"Then what is it, girly?" Mr. Metzger was a kindly man.

She burst out, "I can understand it in you. It's part of your business. You didn't pretend to—like me."

"I think you're a pretty swell kid." The assurance was quiet and genuine.

"That isn't what I mean. He—Walls— a weariness swamped her emotion. "Oh, we were both being snarlies. I expect. One thing against another. Why should I put up a wall when I get the worst of it?"

"You didn't get so much the worst of it," he reminded her. "For instance, you certainly put over a fast one on the expense account."

"Oh, that! I'll send you the money."

"Thanks. Say, girly; I don't get this. Mr. Metzger was worried. His former charge was obviously not happy. "What's it all about, your getting the worst of it?"

"That last bit of film was something of a jar."

"Why? You knew it was coming."

"I most certainly did not."

"Why not? I told you I'd shot it."

"Yes. But Wally promised me it would never be used. I trusted him."

"You got a right to trust him."

"Never again."

"Lissen, girly. He told you that sequence was out, didn't he?"

"Yes."

"Well, that was what he thought."

"How could he have? You're trying to protect him. I don't know why."

"Because I'm for him. And I'm for you. I'm for both of you. Now I'm going to open clean. He was playing straight with you. He thought he had me stopped on the sequence. I palmed a phoney on him. It was easy for me. I used to be a prestidigitator's stooge before I got into the legitimate. He got what he thought was that film and chucked it a mile out into the Atlantic."

"That makes it a little better," said the girl, but there was a somber emphasis on the qualifying word.

"I ought to make it a hundred per cent. Why, he was all set to throw me to the sharks if I didn't give it up. That's a rough guy, girly."

She shook her head. "No, it doesn't square him."

He threw up his hands. "Well, what does the girl expect of a man?"

"I can't get over his tricking me into such a position."

"The love clinch, you mean?"

"Don't; it was only camera stuff for him. It's sickening."

"That's where you're off on the wrong foot. It wasn't camera stuff. It was the real McCoy for Wally. I reckon he just kinda forgot all about old Metzger and little quick-fire. Lost his head, as you might say. Folks do, you know."

"I've known of it happening," she murmured, and there followed the fugitive flash of a smile which led the astute manager to suspect that matters were by no means hopeless yet.

"If you ask me, girly," he propounded with vigor, "it was like this. He knew I was going to be there on the deck, but he didn't figure when I had a good hideout. You didn't know I was there, I'll bet."

"Of course I didn't," said Maida indignantly.

"Now look at it this way," he wheeled. "You two meet there. He looks around and doesn't spot me. Then the pair of you get going in the—er—speed-up everything else fades out. And there you are!"

"I wish I could believe it," she muttered.

"It's straight fact. Anyway, what's the harm? Your friends haven't spotted you, have they? No."

Chapter XXX

"Now I'll tell you what I'll do," said Mr. Metzger. "I'll make you a present of that roll of films."

"Oh, Mr. Metzger," said Maida. "That is good of you!"

"A wedding present," he qualified archly.

"Oh! Is that the only way I can get it?"

"Absolutely."

"It's a snappy little plan," she admitted. "But I'm not the only one concerned."

"You mean Wally?"

"You mustn't say a word of it to him. Please!" she cried in panic. "Don't worry. I've taken all the chances I'm going to with that bird," stated Mr. Metzger positively. "You give my idea a thought, girly."

Naturally she gave it several thoughts, though against her better judgement. The outcome of her thinking was a passive resolution. Fate—thus she theorized—started this whole business. (She characteristically ignored the contributory fact of her thousand dollars which had diverted the aforesaid fate from the real Miss McCabe.) Let fate finish it. Or pass it up. She, Maida, wouldn't wiggle a finger. She was tired. In fact, she was through.

All Kinds of Meats Better with French's

Possibly fate accounted for the regularity with which she returned from her social gayeties at approximately three a. m. Or her penchant for taking a series of prolonged inhalations, doubtless very good for the health, at the top of the high steps whilst letting her gaze up and down the dark and empty street. However, it was not fate, but that more reliable arbiter of human destinies, routine, which brought Route Salesman Number Thirty-nine along after she had repeated her maneuver several times. She greeted him in comradely fashion. "Hiya, Miss!" he responded. "I seen the boy friend."

"Oh! Did you? Is he well?"

"Well enough. But he's sore. You and him stage a ruckus?"

"No, indeed. We parted good friends."

"He ain't nobody's friend any more. Got a permanent grouch. Threatened to jam my head in a ten-gallon can. Told me to stick to my own route, he was through with it. That's what he thinks."

"Isn't he?"

"I'll say he ain't. He's route drivin' here on my night off."

"When? Surely here was fate on the job."

"Tuesday a. m., the seventeenth."

"At the same time?"

"There or thereabouts. Routers ain't as reliable as us regulars. Say, Miss?"

OPPOSES WHITE BREAD — which was found to cause serious ill-effects in dogs and rats.

LONDON, March 21 — (Reuters) — Britons eat artificially whitened bread — of lesser food value than natural bread and containing chemicals of unknown power — because their ancestors were snobs, the official health journal, Better Health, complained today. The habit harks back to the days when white bread on the table was a sign of affluence. The journal agreed with a government decision to ban the use of agents — a flour "whitener"

JAP DEATH RATE DOWN — Japan's death-rate in 1949 was the lowest ever recorded, it was disclosed by government figures published today. During the year, one Japanese was born every 11.6 seconds, and one Japanese died every 33.3 seconds. The government figures put Japan's population at about 80,200,000.
