Literature And Life

THE BIBLE IN TENNYSON

Henry Van Dyke said this in his little book on Tennyson: "The English Bible was popular in the broadest sense, long before it was recognized as one of our noblest English classics. It has coloured the talk of the household and the language of scholars. It has been something more than a well of English undefiled." The music of its familiar phrases haunts all the fields and groves of our fine literature. We find Biblical allusions and quotations in poets like Shakespeare, Milton and Wordsworth; in novelists like Scott and Hawthorne; in essayists like Bacon, Steele and Addison; and in critics like Ruskin and Carlyle.

There are found in the poetry of Tennyson more than four hundred references to the Bible. He was a student of the Bible as those who read "In Memoriam" know. He also read all available literature that shed light on the scriptures. He hoped that the Bible would be read by more and more people; "because," he said, "of the good English in which it is written." In his view it was an education to know it.

In 1829, he won the university prize by his poem, "Timbuctoo," in which the words occur — "and teach him to attain by shadowing forth the unattainable," surely an echo of "Be ye perfect" . . . This is one of the earliest references or allusions to the Bible in his writings.

The longest of his works at which he worked for sixty years, beginning with "The Lady of Shalott," may be gathered up in one statement — an illustration of the struggle between sense and soul. This is a great Biblical idea. Paul in the seventh chapter of Romans, tells us that this was his problem. Browning puts it well in "Rabbi Ben Ezra." The body at its best, how far can it promote thy soul on life's rough way? "He is but a brute whose flesh has soul to suit." It was a sin of the flesh that brought the Round Table to ruin. Lancelot, one of Arthur's knights, paid too much attention to the Queen Guinevere. This whole poem is full of allusions to the Bible. The tragedy of sin and its consequences is shown here.

"In Memoriam" said to be the greatest poem that ever grew out of a grave is saturated with the Bible. It is Christian throughout. It deals with the problem of immortality. Take the reference to Lazarus. His silence after he was raised — Did something seal the lips of the Evangelist? Take too the cantos dealing with Christmas: viz. 28, 78, 104. Take also those musical verses, "Ring Out Wild Bells," culminating with "Ring in the Christ who is to be. He hopes to meet Hallen in the next world.

The poem "Rizpah," is a notable case where he takes a Biblical character and uses an event in English life along with it and weaves them into a poem which so captivated the mind of Swinburne — especially the line, "They moved in my side," referring to the bones which the mother picked up under the gallows.

Tennyson was a Christian poet. He believed in prayer and those lines in the "Passing of Arthur," "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of," are well known. He believed in progress. "Through the ages one increasing purpose runs." Did he not see in imagination many of our modern improvements? Take the first "Locksley Hall": "Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails. Pilots of the purple twilight . . . Heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there reigned a ghastly dew From the nations' airy navies, grappling in the central blue. He hoped too for what men are dreaming of now — "The parliament of man, the federation of the world."

Like his brother, Browning, on a neighboring peak of Parnassus, he believed in the "larger hope." That good would be the final goal of ill.

Miss Robin reviewed the annual meeting of the New Brunswick Home Economics Association held recently at Fredericton. The WEEK at S. D. U.

Registration day! The lineup outside the registration room, greetings of welcome, the friendly handshakes, the swapping of summer experiences: Then the Rector: "Senior, isn't it Tom?" "That's right Father." And as we passed along: "Sophomore, Father," "Junior, Father," "Freshman, Father." We were at St. Dunstan's, some for the first time, others for the seventh. . . .

Yes, on Tuesday of this week, the complement of St. Dunstan's was brought up to par when the students of College years enrolled for the 1951-52 year. For some time the high school students had been enjoying life at S.D.U., having registered on September 6th.

In the short time we have all been together, there is a definite trend towards organizing activities with a little delay as possible. There seems to be an atmosphere that says "This will be the year!" Wednesday evening, one could find Student Union President George Cameron poring over the constitution of this important organization. Football manager, Conrad Kennedy was seen scurrying from the Bursar's office with three footballs in his arms. And the newly appointed Editor of Red and White was hunting the countryside for his Business Manager in order to appoint the rest of his staff. (If anyone in Kensington reads this would he tell Jim Saunders to report to the College as soon as possible today).

It is doubtful if ever before in the history of St. Dunstan's have there been so many students return after summer vacation with such a variety of experiences. Many of the members of the U. N. T. D. sailed to the British Isles and spent leave there. At least three were stationed on the West coast, and two of these sailed as far as Hawaii. Other adventurous boys and girls were employed in various positions at the world famous summer resort at Jasper Park, Alberta. Besides these, there was an unusual large number who worked in manufacturing plants in Toronto and Hamilton. Finally, there were the C.O.T.C. boys who were stationed in Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec.

We feel that the contacts so many of us have made during the summer will aid us greatly in our search for education. Certainly such experiences in the great big world beyond arouse us to a recognition of reality. To be educated we need to be able to stare squarely at reality, and yet not be discouraged or overawed. When we are able to do this, then we may feel that our studies are being worthwhile.

As the press has already reported, there have been some changes in the staff here at St. Dunstan's. We are very happy to welcome Rev. Thomas MacLellan and Rev. Allan MacDonald to the teaching staff, as we do Mr. O'Connor who succeeds Mr. Gerald Clark in the Commerce Department. A hearty welcome also to Rev. Frank Aylward who succeeds

Campbell, vice-president; and Sister Francis Loyola, secretary-treasurer. Resolutions of thanks to the proprietor, Mr. Robson, for an excellent dinner, and to the past president for her work on behalf of the Association were passed unanimously. After making plans for the next meeting, members adjourned.
