TRIBUTE

(Dedicated to Home)

On the banks of every river, and the running streams so clear, And the farms of inland acres, bring fond memories so dear. Of the days upon the island, when there's merriment and glee. By the natives in their kindness, in the Garden of the Sea. Where the waters roll enchanted, in the Gulfed and straightened sea.

From Cape North to all points Eastward, and along the Northern shore. In the fringe of the Atlantic and the ocean's rumbling roar— As it breaks upon the sandbars, and against the banks of clay—

On the shores of P. E. Island; swished and kissed with mist and spray, in the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, and St. Peter's inland bay, Where the fields slope down so gently, from the uplands to the shore. Inward from the open harbor, that is filled with song and jore. Of the friendly folk so genial, with the russet sands to bask. In the sun and tepid waters with surcease from labor's task— To enhance the recreation, that the languid bodies ask,

From the factory, farm, or goods stores, in the village at the Bay. Where the willing clerks are serving, those to whom they all convey— Courtesy and prompt attention, like my old pal "Butty" Pat— Who works in a store of standard, formerly run by Chester Pratt; Whom I see on every visit, and with whom we like to chat.

So we pay our humble tribute, to our native land of birth, The Dominion's smallest Province, but its place of greatest worth. For it has within its reaches, those of honored blood and kin—

Friends and neighbors are our parents, who have graciously with— Earthly places of distraction, with a heavenly home to win, In the sanctum of the blessed — far beyond this mortal door. In the abode that is eternal—Over on the Golden Shore— Where departed dwell in glory, 'round the Master's sacred throne— In the sunshine of His mercy, that forgave and did atone. To give life with Him Forever, in His many mansioned Home.

August 25, 1950. —Peter A. Reilly.
