Marriage of the Marquis de Lorne to Princess Louise.

Sackville, March 23d, 1871. London, 23d.—The marriage of Princess Louise to the Marquis de Lorne took place today in St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

Ministers of the Cabinet, foreign Ambassadors of the Royal Family and the very cream of English society were present.

Of the bridal party the first to arrive was the Duke of Argyll in full Highland costume, the Duchess of Argyll in black and silver, the Princess of Wales in a blue satin robe with train of blue velvet, leading the Royal children dressed in ecru and white.

The Queen gave away the bride. After a pause the Queen entered, robed in black satin, very low in the neck, also wore a veil and a coronet of diamonds.

The Princess followed. She wore a dress of white satin with a white train. Montera lace veil and a wreath of orange blossoms.

After the ceremony the Queen took the Princess in her arms and gave her a hearty kiss. The Marquis knelt and kissed the Queen's hand.

The bridal party then took carriage for Clarendon where they are to spend the honeymoon. The road was lined with triumphal arches, and they cheered the bride and bridegroom all the way to their new home.
