MARY HAWORTH

Girl, New In Country, Asks How To Meet The Right Man

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a single girl, 30 years of age, just recovered from a broken heart. As I am new in this country, can you tell me where to go to meet the right man?

Would you suggest a matrimonial agency? Somehow I feel that men who go there are serious minded; do you agree? Would you know a good one? I am told they charge as much as $120; is this a fair fee?

In my present work as governess, there isn't much free time; that's why I thought of an agency. I hope to hear from you soon and will appreciate any suggestions. With kindest regards,— E.N.

Dear E.N.: Perhaps this is a strictly outsider view, but it is my impression that Americans generally don't take matrimonial agencies very seriously. They are a matter of jest or of rejection in the average mind, rather than a favorably regarded (or so-called socially acceptable) form of help.

For example, even men and women who have found good helpmates through agency offices (and I am assuming that this does happen)— even they tend to keep this aspect of their courtship a secret from others. They seem to consider it a prudent face-saving measure. They don't want people to know they had to advertise commercially for love and companionship.

I understand that in certain other countries and cultures, however, the matrimonial bureau (possibly known by another name) is a respected institution, to which parents repair as a matter of course, in planning suitable marriages for sons and daughters.

In my line of work, there are few editorial taboos; but one firm taboo is that we don't try to find mates for lonely persons. That they must do on their own responsibility.

The classic man hunt begins by making friends, who in turn bring other friends into your life in a chain reaction, leading, hopefully, to the treasure sought.

So, go to church in your spare time. Ask the pastor to put you on committees (explaining to him why you long to meet nice people with kindred interests). Also visit the YWCA hospitality center nearest you and ask the appropriate counsellor there to help you plan fruitful use of your limited leisure. An evening discussion group, meeting weekly or monthly, might solve your problem nicely.— M.H.

Dear Mary Haworth: Usually it is the funnies that most people read first, but somehow your column appeals to me above all.

Many times my parents have discussed the advice you give and it seems pou have the same philosophy on teen-age problems as they do. Often I have had the exact same problem on dating, boys, etc., as those you discuss. And always your advice has cheered me up. Now I am finally beginning to understand things.

I graduated from high school last month. My parents haven't allowed me to steady-date and run around at night. I used to think they were dead - wrong; that I was missing out on all the fun. But now I agree with your answer to the Indian girl, that the best years of our life are still to come...

Thanks for all your wonderful advice. I wish more teen-agers' parents would have such great concern for their sons' and daughters' upbringing as you and mine do. Sincerely,— M.B.

Dear M.B.: Thank you very much for your charming note. I imagine it will give the Indian girl's heart a lift, to know that she isn't the only teen-age girl in this part of the world whose devoted parents are protecting her, wisely, from too much freedom, too early.— M.H.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES EDWIN GILLIS

Double Ring Ceremony Unites Couple At St. John's, Belfast

St. John's Presbyterian Church, Belfast, was the scene of a pretty wedding recently, when Viola May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward MacDonald, Flat River, became the bride of Charles Edwin Gillis, son of Mrs. James MacDougall and the late John W. Gillis, Newton Cross.

Rev. Donald Nicholson officiated at the double ring ceremony. During the signing of the register Mrs. John MacPherson, sister of the groom, sang "The Wedding Prayer" accompanied by Mrs. Martin MacDonald.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a flood length gown of white lace over satin with a pearl sequined bodice and lily point sleeves. Her elbow length veil of nylon tulle fell from a crystal tiara and she carried a bouquet of red roses. Her jewellery was tiny pearl earrings and necklace, a gift of the groom.

Mrs. Howard Hancock and Mrs. Bill Jardine, sisters of the bride. were bridesmaids, wearing identical dresses of yellow and green nylon with matching headdresses and bouquets of pink and white carnations.

Elaine MacDonald, neice of the bride, was flower girl. She wore a yellow dress with white accessories, and carried a basket of mixed flowers.

Dan Ross, brother of the groom, was best man. Alvin MacDonald, brother of the bride, and John MacPherson, brother-in-law of the groom, ushered guests to their pews, which were marked with white snowballs.

Mrs. Edward MacDonald chose for her daughter's wedding a beige two piece linen dress with white accessories, with a corsage of white and red roses.

After the ceremony the guests were received in Belfast Hall where a lobster supper was served by the Flat River Women's Institute. The head table was tastefully decorated with mixed flowers and lighted candles. In the centre was a three tier wedding cake.

Rev. Donald Nicholson proposed the toast to the bride with the groom responding. Mrs. Bill MacPherson was in charge of the guest book. Following the reception at the home of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. Gillis left on a honeymoon trip through the eastern United States. ELLEN'S DIARY

Flowers In Remembrance Laid On The Covering Sod

Tomorrow, we recall, is to be Memorial Sunday at the "Old Kirk" at the Corner. Then its folks will gather in a service of remembrance for those of family and friends whom the years have taken: the babes, the young, the older-grown, the aged. Remembering those "loved and lost", for whom, despite Time's healing touch, and notwithstanding every comforting hope and promise and verity written, the hearts still mourn.

Presently then, folks will bring their flowers in loving memory of those departed, placing them on the covering green sod of the graves in the cemetery there . . . Newer graves, and old. Some ancient there are: stones, which mark the pioneers' resting places, now quaint and weather-worn with the years. We think of that of great great-grandfather to our small ones, he that looks out at us not unkindly from the oval frame on the parlor wall, the same who in his day at the mill in the valley sawed the logs into lumber for the "Old Kirk" of his faith, who rests there among kith and kin.

As she so often did in her schooldays, Granddaughter this evening placed her flowers on her "Aunty Karolyn's" grave —she that was mother to Jamie and Gage. She selected perfect blossoms in loving remembrance of her aunt's kindness to her when she was but a child.

They rest there, kin and friend, in that pretty country spot at the Corner—at cross-roads, where, close by, the road which comes up prettily past the fine homes and fruitful farms washed by the river, which gives the community its name, joins the Island's great artery of travel which is the T.C.H.

There by the Highway, and on the nearer side of that River Road, rests the dead. Opposite, as always seated picturesquely amid its stately trees, is that house known across distances as "The Doctor's." On the lawns, flowers of his planting still bloom in their season, though he and the small kindly woman. his wife, have been gone from it for years now, to rest in the Churchyard, close by.

Now this summer-week, somewhat weary, we think, with its "much living" goes too to its rest: picks up now and faces away, choosing, we fancy, to walk the farm-lanes and quiet paths. By the windless grainlands, heads weighted, bending, it goes. Past the pasturing herds on "the thousand hills," and the flocks that drink where "living waters" flow. Following certain beacons of stars, facing into the moonlight so that the shadows fall behind. So this August week goes now on silent shoes, up the farmlands and away.

And the dead . . . . ours . . . . yours. "lost a while" to sight, though kept forever in heart — what of these we have loved?
"'Keep this for me.'
What child has not said this,
And placed a treasure in his mother's hand
With strict injunctions she should keep it safe
Till he return?
He knows it will be safe;
No troubled thought or anxious fear besets his mind,
And off he runs, light-hearted,
to his play.
If children can so trust, why cannot we,
And place our treasures, too, in God's safe hands?
Our hopes, ambitions, needs, and
those we love,
Just see them, in His all-embracing care,
And say with joyous heart.
'They are with Thee'."

Until Monday — Diary — Good-night . . .
