Juvenile Delinquency Battle Seen Fought In Classrooms

This is the first in a series of articles dealing with positive steps that might be taken to cure juvenile delinquency. By G. K. HODENFIELD WASHINGTON (AP) — The battle against juvenile delinquency must be fought in the classrooms. It will be a long battle, and expensive, but nowhere are conditions more favorable. Nowhere is there greater chance for success. That is the essence of a report issued today by the National Education Association following a year-long study of the problem. Although it calls the school a powerful and pervasive force in fighting delinquency, the report emphasizes that the school can't do the job alone. A successful program calls for close co-operation with the family, community agencies, law enforcement agencies and the courts. Dr. William C. Kvaraceus of Boston University, director of the NEA project, says the schools have these strategic advantages:

START EARLY They get the youngsters early and maintain close contact with them for years. They have professional personnel, trained to work with children and youth. They have a natural relationship with the parents—much more so than the police, courts, and welfare agencies. Finally: "The modern school has accepted a responsibility... for the personal and social growth of children, as well as for their academic training and acquisition of knowledge."

"The school's primary function is not that of a hospital, institution, or warehouse to store children—good, bad or indifferent. As a school, its major concern remains that of instruction and learning."

The report stresses that the school's responsibility to the delinquent is the same as to other handicapped children—the blind, the deaf, the crippled, the mentally retarded. LITTLE HELP But, it says, of all the exceptional children needing special help, "the delinquent is the one most likely to get the back of the hand, rather than the helping hand, from adults." It quotes many youth workers as saying that the misbehaving delinquent or pre-delinquent is the one youngster with whom they least like to work. The 350-page book, Delinquent Behavior—Principles and Practices is the second of two volumes resulting from the project. The first, Delinquent Behavior—Culture and the Individual, was published last spring. There is no pat solution to the problem of juvenile delinquency, the first report said. It called for more and better research, an expansion of community and school efforts to identify the delinquent-bound youngster before it is too late.

Life Dedicated To His Church

QUEBEC (CP)—Premier Paul Sauve said Wednesday Bishop Francois de Montmorency-Laval laid the base for co-operation between the state and the Roman Catholic Church in Quebec when he arrived here 300 years ago. In an address at a banquet honoring the founder of the church hierarchy in Canada, Mr. Sauve described Bishop Laval as an architect who dedicated his life to building up the church, the state and education in the new colony. Text of Mr. Sauve's speech was home in Springfield West, and is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Barwise. Mrs. Harry MacWilliams is a patient in the Community Hospital, receiving treatment. Miss Helen Williams, O'Leary, fell and sustained a broken arm recently. Mrs. Kenneth MacKendrick had the misfortune to fall and receive a broken arm which was attended to by Dr. Dewar. Mrs. Daisy MacNeill returned to her home in Mount Royal, after a very enjoyable visit with relatives and friends in the U. S. A. Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Crane (nee Bonita Grey) were married on Saturday afternoon Oct. 3rd, in the O'Leary Baptist Church. Rev. Ross Howard performed the wedding ceremony. D.U.

Released to the press in advance of delivery. King Louis XIV of France gave Bishop Laval and the colonial governor almost equal powers, Mr. Sauve said. They jointly named members of the sovereign council which had jurisdiction over the colony's courts, its police and its finances.
