ELLEN'S DIARY

Strange April Varies From Gay To Stormy

"Well, here goes another," the Curiosity-cat offers, in a grin.

"Another?" we echo.

"Yes, another Saturday. And isn't it amazing how often you come round?" she queries, eyes sober. "Did you know that we can communicate?" Granddaughter observed this question on which was a split thought, for obviously the question was not relevant to the book she was reading.

"Yes, she said, 'they do by signs. Isn't that interesting?'"

Then a little honey-bee came to communicate, why not a great orange cat from his cushion on the couch, with a mew, this has been, 'weather-wise, and yet unpredictable, April is an odd, moody, A mixture. Temperamental like humans, who have not yet learned to rule that ingredient in their make-up, termed temper.

"And, oh dear, what is wrong over here?" we inquired of Peter, who was stopped by the house across the lane this afternoon. There was traces of tears on a young cheek and sadness in his eyes.

"Mommie spanked me."

"Oh! And why? There was a reason, eh?"

"That red truck of mine wouldn't start for me. It wouldn't go straight! And... I threw it across the kitchen. And she..."

"She'd it perfectly right," Mack commented behind the door as he was reading. "That will teach him to control his temper. He's been excused too often, he's become the baby. Too young to understand. Huh!"

"Hurt," Peter complained.

"How? Those spansks? They were only love taps. If I had been doing it, you know, they would have hurt twice as much. If you're going to let things like this grow up in Peter, you will never make a hockey team, never make a croquet your temper—that's for sure!"

And listening, the introduction of a fine sermon from our teen years, delivered, as it happened, by a guest—minister to a church, I thought, "My friends," he said, "when I received the invitation to bring this message to you, I was surprised by your minister's absence this morning. I prepared a sermon with every aim to give you a message. I mislaid it. Or perhaps," he smiled, "my wife, who delights in keeping my study tidy, kicked it up mistakenly, and put it on the fire."

There was a slight raise in

Free and easy fit through the middle end a slim skirt—a look that's slim, young, striped circle of fuzzy details. Assort in poplin, blouse.

WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS

Year's Report Presented At CWL Annual Meeting

A detailed report of the year was presented at the recent annual meeting of Sacred Heart Parish Council of the Catholic Women's League held April 7 at the home of Mrs. Margaret Perry.

A short monthly meeting preceded the annual meeting. At that time members received a report of the previous month's work. The meeting was chaired by the vice-president, Mrs. Albert Noonan and opened with prayer by Rev. Gerald Steele. Minutes and correspondence were read by the secretary, Mrs. Cecel Cahill.

The treasurer, Mrs. Margaret Perry, reported that the main sources of revenue were from card parties, banquets, pantry fund, membership dues, and bursaries consisted of national and provincial dues, donations to national scholarship, school prizes, Sacred Heart radio program, treats for the needy, and gifts for patients at Chronic Care Centre, missionaries, masses offered for deceased parishioners.

Three members visited the Chronic Care Centre and brought treats and gifts. An envelope collection, was taken up to sponsor Catholic radio and television programs.

A number of families were given such items as clothes, shoes, and necessities. Fruit and candy. One family, whose home had been destroyed by fire, was assisted by being given a clothes and groceries.

During the year members made 708 visits to sick and shut-in.

Officers for the coming year are: president, Mrs. Albert Noonan; second vice-president, Mrs. Edith McKeown; third vice-president, Mrs. Joseph A. result; treasurer, Mrs. Margaret Perry; secretary, Mrs. Cecel Cahill.

BOW TIE TOPPER

There's lots of bows in this little coat that makes it quite outstanding in the current fashion scene. The topper is three-quarter length and features an intriguing bow-tie keyhole neckline. Its softly rounded top silhouette is achieved by the dropped shoulder line. Diagonal slashed pockets are placed high, the sleeves reach just below the elbow and there is a six-button closing.

MARY HAWORTH

College Girl Makes Bid For Independence In City

Dear Mary Haworth: Our daughter, Jane, 19, is completing her second year at college in a new, English small town. She is a serious student, making good grades.

During adolescence, Jane had emotional problems of perhaps more than average intensity and has been rebellious at home.

Her aspirations always have been high, however, and (her father) have no doubt that, unless something untoward intervenes, she will develop into a fine adult.

At present she has strong feelings for a boy, a young man, unconventional life and wants to take an apartment with a girl friend in New York City this summer and find domestic employment as a combination sifter waitress or chambermaid. This, she argues, would be the most maturing "real life" enterprise.

Her only job experience to date has been as a nursery school helper and summer camp counselor.

My wife and I are inclined to oppose the plan, though we don't want to be unreasonably restrictive. We question the propriety and advisability of an apartment in the circumstances; we have misgivings about the boy, and, moreover, we fear for her safety, at 19, among the hazards of the big city. She grew up in a homogeneous middle-class Maryland environment.

Also, our means are moderate and we expect Jane to feel a responsibility to earn some money during summer for school clothes and incidentals. This she does easily as a camp counselor and it is uncertain whether there would be any financial gain for her in the New York venture.

Further, her domestic wages, if any, would limit her choice of lodgings to the poorer sections of the city. Are we being over-protective and unduly restrictive in opposing her plan? We the news, vague smiles, no chuckles. This was "The Lord's House." And religion was a substitute for a better life.

"And it could be," he continued, "she was more of an individual than I knew in any event, I've noticed. And you can understand the enthusiasm she had when I mentioned it. I call it that. 'Wrath,' is another term for it. To add fuel to this, my horse was slow coming in from the pasture to be harassed. And when at length we got on the road, I never saw that dear animal proceed so slowly. And my thoughts were on the message she should bring.

And then, as we came up the hills and down the vales of this peaceful morning, a text repeated itself in my mind. It is that from which, not without a certain remorse on my part, I would remove it. It is the text from the Book of Proverbs. And I would wish that all of us young and older, should abide by its choice of our years, so to maintain good news in our hearts, peace in our souls, and that we should be slow to anger, is better than the wrath; and that he who is angry, is less than he that labors to escape it. This is a weekend prayer: "Purge from our hearts the desire for anger, and keep us from being angry. And bid it settle there."

And bid it settle there."

Farewell Party Held For Rector

KENSINGTON — Rev. Ronald Parsons, Mrs. Parsons and family were tendered a farewell party recently at St. Mark's Hall, Kensington, prior to their departure from the parish of New London.

The senior parish warden, John Fillman, acted as master of ceremonies, and after brief remarks called on Mrs. William Pidgeon who read an address, conveying regret in parting, and noting the rector's faithfulness in caring for the souls of the parish. Good wishes were extended to the family for happiness and success in another parish and to Mr. Parsons in his new assignment.

It was decided to send for a copy of the institute's history. A questionnaire on education was answered.

bers. Mrs. Craswell invited members to her home for the May meeting, when roll call is to be answered with flower slipper seeds, or bulbs.

Lunch was served by the hostesses and committee in charge.

KINGSBORO WI

Kingsboro WI members held their April meeting at the home of Mrs. Wendell Robertson with an attendance of 10 members.

Roll call was answered with an Irish Joke. The school committee reported cleaning the school, and that paper towels, and cleaning agents were needed for use in the school.

It was voted to pay for a new school door and for books purchased by the teacher. Correspondence was read and discussed.
