Strange But True
By F. H. MacArthur

Jeroboam is the name given by French wine merchants in the 1700's to one of their wine bottles of huge bottle holding four quarts. It was the custom in those days to name the big wine bottles after the Kings of Israel this one honored King Jeroboam. So acute has the drought become in Southern Georgia that banks are sending water by truck to parched farms in a five county area. The water, distributed free, is primarily for the relief of thirst-ridden cattle.

Stan Chatham, nine-year-old grandson of Virginia's governor Thomas Stanley, was so impressed by his luncheon date with the Queen Mother on her recent visit to the U. S. that he observed later:

"Gee, I think she's nice; and so pretty." His brow wrinkled as he recalled the royal visitor and added:

"But there's only one thing. She don't speak English very well. But I guess she speaks it pretty good considering the short time she's been in this country. The restaurant business is Canada's sixth industry, the fifth largest in Ontario.

Confetti is used at English weddings instead of rice.

Fatness is no joke, it's the number one scourge of people on this continent.

Canadian families paid $82 annually for medical services in 1952. Americans paid $207 for the same service.

An official courier system started in 1721 between Quebec and Montreal carried private letters as well as government dispatches.

There are 1500 covered bridges still in use throughout the world, and strange but true, the covered bridge was in use in 783 B. C. in olden days they were called kissing bridges. Why? Because many a couple got married as a result of kisses stolen while passing through the covered bridges.

In a test conducted by the New York Telephone Company on hundreds of "hello" girls, more than half proved to have unpleasant voices and mannish voices.

Believe it or not, but there are ancient Chinese tablets dating back to 200 B. C. which bear fingerprints with clear, firm impressions. These were apparently used to identify the author of the tablets.

Each Indian had a drop put on his hand. The last man called was Seymour. The drop of colorless liquid turned pink and then crimson in his hand. Seymour glanced at his fellow suspects. Their hands were not red. He broke down and confessed and in March, 1932, was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Street had poured water in the hands of all the Indians except Seymour. On his hand he poured orcein, a colorless liquid that turns red when it contacts the air! A guilty conscience and superstition did the rest.
