Many Phases Of Guiding Discussed At Conference

"Guiding through Understanding," was the theme of a very successful provincial conference for Girl Guide leaders which was held at Clinton Heights Motel this past weekend. Peginning Friday evening, Nov. 19, the sessions concluded on Sunday afternoon—the 21st. Conducted by the Provincial Training Committee under the leadership of Mrs. Harry W. Cudmore, the program dealt with many phases of the Guide program. Tasks, discussion groups, physical education sessions and music instruction were all part of the varied and interesting training. Those attending felt that much excellent help had been received, thanks to the careful preparation of the Training Committee.

Mrs. Cudmore emphasized the need of understanding, both in work with girls and with other adults in the movement, and that much more is to be gained through understanding than through criticism. She stated that "doing your duty to God, and your fellow men," which is a basis of the guide law and promise, brings into focus the true meaning of understanding. Noting that the main problems in the world today are those dealing with power, materialism, confusion and development, the speaker urged that girls be helped so they can deal intelligently with these problems when they reach maturity. Stating that the main stresses affecting a girl of university age today are of an economic, financial, social or moral nature, Mrs. Cudmore spoke of the problems of each group and asked how each could be helped through understanding. Seeking ways in which the Guide program can be of assistance, lively discussion groups followed, which were led by Mary Donahue, Mrs. C. Phaneuf, Mrs. E. Norrie, Mrs. G. Warner and Mrs. Joseph Brophy. In these, it was shown how, "love of God," character building, "Health and Safety" and "Service" were promoted through brownies, guides and rangers. The "Joy of Guiding" was the topic of a fine talk by Mary Donahue. She spoke of the joy of working with leaders and girls and of sharing experiences and of the enjoyment of nature. She stated that the plan of Lord Baden-Powell for youth was founded on joy and happiness, and that genuine happiness only is found in doing our duty to God, and to mankind. Speaking of some of the skills and tests used in Guiding, she said they should not be goals in themselves, but only means to character building. Urging them to be enthusiastic, she asked the leaders to show the girls that Guiding is of great value. Physical Education occupied an important part in the conference and was ably taught by Mrs. Earl Taylor. Many interesting exercises, games and competitions that could be used in guide gatherings were introduced, and provided lively and enjoyable interludes at three sessions. Music was not forgotten in the training, and under the capable direction of Mrs. E.C. Hughes, provincial music adviser, and Mrs. George Warren, a wide variety of songs were learned. A very beautiful part of the conference was the inspirational gathering "Guides Own", conducted on Sunday morning by Mrs. Ferno Rogers Keeping to the theme of "Understanding". She spoke of the basic beliefs of the major religions of the world and asked for tolerance of each other's faiths. Contributing also to the training were "Thoughts for the Day" by Mrs. Eddie Morrison, and talks on health and service by Mrs. Stewart Smith, on Business Administration by Mrs. E. C. Norrie and on the Patrol System by Mary Donahue. Flag break, horseshoe formation and camp fire, were subjects of able demonstrations by Mrs. Joseph Brophy and of a brownie pow-wow by Mrs. Lynne Ellis. Before conclusion of the conference Mrs. G.M. Avard, provincial commissioner spoke to the group. She stressed that there are three areas of understanding; that leaders must understand themselves; that they must understand the guide program and what they are teaching the girls; and finally they must understand the girls and their needs. Above all, by actions and deeds they must at all times present a good example to the girls.

ELLEN'S DIARY

A Drift Of Gulls Flew In To Glean The Fields

Now the sun was over all. A small wind hushed the buds on the bare branches with a little lullaby. The stream ran jewelled behind its fringing alders. We, we reflected with the blinding glints of the springtime when golden cowslips adorned its edge, but more soberly it would be, in-keeping with the season at hand. In a beat of small wings, a company of sparrows alighted in the lilac shrubbery to hold a brief but chatty meeting there. Carefree apparently in the sunshine. No thought of tomorrow's adversities and changes. That was left to us humans. "This is surely a lovely afternoon" we commented. "It is!" James the head of this house and family, agreed. "It will give the farmers a lift with the work—to get on with the potato-grading, or the plowing or whatever they happen to be at... Hand me that wing, will you Ellen?" He was cleaning the kitchen stovepipes at the time, at the near side of the orchard, we, as women's lot, attending to the details, adding here and there those womanly touches which after all contribute a share to most projects. "Do you intend to clean the chimney too?" Peter, come by, questioned. "Yes" James replied. "Why do you ask?" "Oh, I was just wondering... Will you have to clean it again before Christmas?" "It's not likely. I'll give it a good cleaning now. That should do."

The sparrows lifted and flew as one toward the barnyard. There they would pick up seeds; grains fallen from the pairs of the choring. On the slope of valley opposite, there on Mr. C's pasture, a cow lowed, the sound rather lonely in the season. Above against the blue of the sky, we could fancy a little snowy-bearded man behind his team of reindeers. "You could leave the door open for him" we suggested. "But he likes better to come down the chimney, they say" Peter nodded. "There!" James said giving the stovepipe a final inspection, "that's clean." He glanced at the sun moving over toward the west. "By the time we get the chimney cleaned and the pipes back in place it will be chortle time!" he said. The spring brings its rash of fires: grass-fires that get out of hand, and chimneys incline to catch when that sprightly wind blows. Now the Fall-fires there are. The causes are many. Overheated stoves or a flue "catches" with distressing re-
