Hong Kong Water Famine Expected To Last Until May

HONG KONG (AP)—The next time you stand under a leisurely shower, think of Hong Kong. Every person here must make do with the equivalent of two buckers of water a day for the next five months.

It's been 2½ buckets a day for the last seven months. The Hong Kong government says says that's too much.

This refugee - crowded but modern city of plush hotels and gleaming skyscrapers is suffering from the worst drought in its 122-year history as a British colony.

You can drink martinis, buy mink coats, watch television, eat steak, hire servants to wait on you hand and foot, but you can't get more than two buckets of water a day.

Surrounded by salt water, Hong Kong has no rivers, lakes or natural sources of fresh water. After the British took over Hong Kong in 1841 they built reservoirs and an intricate system of hillside water catchments. For 100 years or so, the people managed.

Then Communists swept over the China mainland, refugees poured into Hong Kong, the colony's population swelled to 3,500,000 from a pre-war 600,000.

MONSOONS MISSING

Early this year the black clouds that herald the monsoon season failed to make their annual appearance. The government started rationing water, first suppying it for ony four hours a day, then four hours every other day. By May, only one inch of rain had been recorded and the ration was sliced to four hours every fourth day.

This will be cut to three hours or two hours every fourth day if things don't improve. There's little prospect of relief before next May.

What do you do when water is so short?

If you're the Hong Kong government, you commit some $200,000,000 to various projects aimed at solving the shortage—giant new reservoirs, pipelines to neighboring China, fleets of water tankers and a network of salt water mains.

If you're a resident, you wash less frequently and wear darker clothes. Barber shops stop providing shampoos. Bartenders push straight drinks or soda set-ups.

The price of cans, buckets and other water containers keeps rising.

CHILDREN WANT BATHS

Children start looking forward to a tub bath or shower, now that it comes only once every four days. On the rare occasions when there's a sprinke of rain, even grownups duck outdoors in swimming trunks to catch a free shower.

Hotels make do by tanking up on "water days" and then rationing the supplies half an hour every morning and evening. Guests get up at dawn and break away from cocktails to catch their showers. The hotels use paper napkins and plastic tablecloths.

The tourist trade has not been hurt. Most visitors treat the drought as a lark.

'Last Hope' Treatment Sparks Corsica Riot

BASTIA, Corsica (Reuters)—Leaders of more than 3,000 demonstrators grappled with police here Thursday night during a march protesting against the failure of any French doctor so far to authorize "last hope" treatment for a four-year-old English boy suffering from leukemia.

Edward Burke arrived here Dec. 22 with his mother in the hope that a local healer, Gaston Maessens, could try a special serum to save his fife.

Maessens is an independent biologist without a doctor's degree and needs the authorization of a French doctor to carry out the treatment.

The people of Bastia started a demonstration of sympathy for the stricken boy, carrying slogans with the words: Quickly, leuke nia does not wait" and "We must save Eddie."

The boy may have to return to England if a French doctor cannot be found to approve the treatment.

The British vice - consul in Ajaccio, William Snook, said Thursday he would have to arrange transport home for Edward and his mother if he could not locate a doctor willing to improve treatment by today.

"If I fail to find a doctor by tomorrow noon I shall be obliged to arrange for their return home without further delay," Snook said.

"I have contacted many doctors and am in constant contact with the French authorities. I am still hopeful."

Opening lead—king of hearts.

Here is a fine hand where unusually perceptive play enabled declarer to bring home a slam contract.

West led the king of hearts and continued with the ace. Declarer ruffed, drew two rounds of trumps, cashed the king of diamonds and ruffed another heart. Then, after cashing the ace of diamonds, he ruffed the jack in dummy.

He was now at a point where he had to either escape a club loser or lose the contract. If he had cashed the A-Kof clubs in the hope of finding either opponent with the singleton or doubleton queen, he would have gone down one.

But the declarer in this case realized he had a far better chance of making the contract by adopting a different method of play. Backing his judgement, he led the jack of clubs, planning to finesse if East followed low. When East covered with the queen, South took the king. West following with the nine.

Declarer then entered dummy with a spade, returned a club, and finessed the eight to make the slam.

South's unusual handling of club suit was clearly correct. At the point when he decided to lead the jack of clubs, he already knew 12 of West's original 13 cards.

West had disclosed an eight-card heart suit at trick two. He had also followed twice to both spades and diamonds, thus accounting for his entire holding in three suits. It therefore became certain that West had been dealt precisely one club.

That club had to be the queen, ten, nine, five or three. There was no hope of making the slam if the singleton was the five or three, so South had to assume it was the queen, ten or nine.

The f e a d of the jack gave South twice as much chance of making the contract, since West figured to be dealt the singleton ten or nine twice as often as the actual case, the percentage play worked to perfection.
