40 Delegates Attend Lecture

"First Principles of Critical Path Method" was the title of a lecture given this week at Summerside, Georgetown and Charlottetown by Linus Ward and Philip Atken of the Research Productivity Council, Fredericton, N.B., and attended by 40 men from various companies and organizations. CPM is a technique for planning, scheduling and controlling work. It is used by contractors and public utilities for construction work, and by manufacturers for starting-up of new products. CPM was originally developed in 1958 as a computer programme for planning manufacture of the Polaris submarines and missiles, but the principles have been used intuitively for a much longer time. Between the extremes of using intuition for small jobs and computers for large jobs, there is a range of medium sized jobs, common in Prince Edward Island, to which CPM can be applied using pencil and paper and a desk calculator. Among those who attended the lecture were staff from Seabrook Farms Frozen Foods Ltd., Summerside Engineering and Electric Departments, Bathurst Marine Ltd., Gulf Garden Foods Ltd., Langley Fruit Packers Ltd., Island Telephone Company, Maritime Electric Company, Defence Construction Ltd., Canada Department of Public Works and P.E.I. Department of Highways.
